VICTORY OF ALLIES BRIGHTENS CLOSE OF WAR'S FOURTH YEAR

Summary Of Events Shows Tide Turns Against Huns.

The fifth year of the war is opening with an outlook brighter for the embattled Nations fighting for Democracy than at any time since the first battle of the Marne.

For the first time since that great struggle, the Germans have met with a serious defeat which may well presage still greater disaster to the enemy in the months to come.

The latest German offensive—or rather the latest stage of the German offensive—which began March 21 of this year—has been definitely checked with losses to the Kaiser's forces which may well be regarded as a German catastrophe.

In the powerful French-American attack on the Marne front and on the front between the Aisne and the Marne, July 17, the aggressive definitely was wrested from the Teutonic forces and taken over by the Allies. Moreover, the American troops have proved in this desperate fighting they are more than the masters of the Germans, man for man, and that as a part of a great military machine they are as effective as any troops on the Western Front.

Nothing that has happened in the four years of terrific fighting on European soil, has given to Great Britain, France and the other Allied Nations greater cause for rejoicing than the magnificent behavior of the American troops.

This encouraging turn of events has followed a year that on the whole has been one of trial and anxiety for the Entente. Russia's defection ruined the chances of a great Allied offensive in the West in 1917. It permitted a concentration of German power in France which for a time taxed to the utmost the power of the Allied resistance.

It also witnessed a great Allied disaster in Italy which gave the Entente leaders many anxious weeks.

The failure of the Germans, despite their tremendous efforts, to break the Allied lines, and the magnificent Italian victory last month enable the Allied world to look forward to the coming year with confidence and hope.

In Russia also the situation has become brighter. Czech-Slovak victories have given hope of the rise of a power in Siberia that will check German penetration in that country, and reconstitute the Eastern front.

In Great Russia, the Ukraine and the Baltic Provinces, German hopes are failing, and German crimes and brutality are provoking a promising reaction.

RED MEN TO PRESENT AMBULANCE

To Camp Meade Next Sunday—Gift Of Maryland Order.

Maryland's Order of Red Men, the oldest organization of this order in the United States and the order that gave the Great Council of the United States the "right to exist", will present to Camp Meade an Ambulance outfit complete. The ambulance is the gift of the Red Men from this State alone, and thus differs from the others given by this Order, which came from the Order at large.

The cost of the Ambulance will be close to $3,000.

The presentation will take place at Camp Meade on Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock. The following program has been arranged.

Program.

Music by the 154th Depot Brigade Band.

Meeting called to order by Marion E. Tyndall, Great Sachem of the Great Council of Maryland, Imp. Order of Red Men.

Singing: "America", by the audience, led by the band.

Invocation by First Lieut. Charles T. Hewitt, Chaplain U. S. Army.

Presentation of the Ambulance to the Medical Department U. S. Army, at the U. S. Army Base Hospital, by Dr. James C. Littleton, Great Chief of Records of the Great Council of Maryland, Imp. Order of Red Men.

Musical selection by the band.

Address, accepting the Ambulance for the Medical Department, U. S. Army, by Lieut. Col. L. A. Kefauver, Commanding Officer of Base Hospital at Camp Meade.

Singing: "The Star Spangled Banner", by the audience; the audience to remain standing to receive the benediction by First Lieut. Charles T. Hewitt, Chaplain U. S. Army.

BAND BENEIT A GREAT SUCCESS

The Boys Realized About $100 From The Benefit Given.

We are glad to report that the benefit given by Manager Tomlinson of the Arcade Theatre for the boys of the Salisbury Cornet Band last Thursday evening was a great success, and that the band organization received about $100 in cash from the proceeds of the sale of tickets.

This is very gratifying as everybody is interested in seeing the city have a first class band organization. The boys of the band are most accommodating in doing all kinds of charity work free of charge, and the concerts they are giving on the plaza near the Army core week in connection with the Business Men's Association is being highly enjoyed by hundreds of our citizens every week. As the cost of keeping the organization together is quite expensive, it is to be hoped that our people will not consider that this is all that is due the boys of the band, but that other benefits will be given them during the summer so as to thoroughly equip them for the winter's campaign. The boys of the organization wish to extend their thanks to the public, for their very generous support at this entertainment and for all courtesies shown them in helping along the finances of their organization.

MARYLAND BOYS READY FOR ACTION

May Be Sent To Front Very Soon.

Maryland's former guardsmen, who recently arrived in France after intensive training at Camp McClellan, Ala., may face the enemy at any time.

According to an announcement made by General March, Chief of Staff, the guardsmen have been assigned to the Fourth Army Corps and constitute a part of the Twenty-ninth National Guard Division. As this division consists of units that have finished training it is not unlikely that the Maryland boys will soon be arrayed against the Huns on the battlefields of France.

General March has also announced assignments of other men from Maryland. The draftees from Camp Meade, who comprise the Three Hundred and Thirtieth and Three Hundred and Tenth Field Artillery, have been assigned to the Fifth Army Corps, while the men who made up the Third and Fourth Companies of the Maryland Coast Artillery have been placed in the One Hundred and Seventeenth Trench Motor Battery, which is part of the Rainbow Division. The draftees from Camp Meade will possibly spend some time in Alsace or some other quiet sector, as they have not yet undergone extensive

INVESTIGATING CHARGES

Of Violating Fair Price List In This County.

The following grocers in the county were fined by Food Administrator W. B. Miller, for violating the Fair Price List established for this county, selling sugar at 10 cents a pound instead of 9 1/2 cents:

Mills & Co., $15.00.
E. J. Melson, $10.00.
R. W. Adkins, $10.00.
Albert Hearn, $10.00.
S. T. Sturgis, $10.00.
W. W. Whayland, $10.00.

Mr. Miller said that he had several more cases under consideration, where groccymen have been making excessive charges, and that in every case was to be thoroughly investigated, and that where the offending shopkeepers refused to pay the fine, the places of business would be closed, or the cases sent to Washington as they elected. He says that he intends to see that the fair price list is strictly lived up to by the groccymen, and also that these store keepers shall allow no partiality in the matter of selling more sugar to families than the law allows.

On the subject of sugar hoarding, Food Controller Miller said that he had given ample warning to everybody not to try in any way to evade the restriction, as laid down by the National Food Administration, and that any cases which he discovered where householders were buying more sugar than the law allowed, he would most surely put the penalty of the law on every case, without regard to who the parties are.

DR. ELLEGOOD SERIOUSLY INJURED

His Automobile Hit By Locomotive While Crossing Track At Delmar.

Dr. Robert G. Ellegood, the well-known physician of Delmar, Del., was badly hurt in an accident which occurred in Delmar this week.

Dr. Ellegood was driving his car across the railroad tracks and failed to see a train which was shifting there. His car was struck and crushed to pieces, so that, as an observer stated "you couldn't tell whether it was a touring car or roadster."

Dr. Ellegood suffered several serious injuries, having his head cut, his ribs broken, and it is feared some internal injuries.

He was rushed to the hospital here, and is reported as being in a serious condition but doing as well as was expected under the circumstances, and it is believed he will recover.

George W. Leonard

Salisbury lost one of its oldest, best known citizens and a man who was highly regarded by all who knew him in the death of Mr. George W. Leonard at his home on Division St. Thursday of this week.

The deceased was the son of the late Joshua Leonard of Somerset Co., and his wife who prior to her marriage was Miss Maria Jane Treake of Baltimore, Md.

Mr. Leonard had reached an age of more than three score and ten, being 78 years, and 6 months of age.

For years he had been connected with the L. E. Williams & Co., of this city. The deceased had been failing for some time, and was taken sick the last time about a month prior to his death. He was a member of the Methodist Church. Funeral services were held this afternoon conducted by the Rev. Dr. Herson and the Rev. Mr. Davis.

Interment in Parsons Cemetery.

Emma C. Morris

Miss Emma C. Morris daughter of the late Wm. P. Morris died at her home on South Division St. Thursday, this week. The funeral will be held this afternoon at Fruitland, 4 o'clock.

The deceased made her home with her sister Miss Morris and her brother Mr. Jno. E. Morris.

Chas. S. Whitman

Mr. Chas. S. Whitman died at his home here on July 20th, following an operation at the Hospital. Deceased was 59 years of age and leaves an aged mother 87 years old, and two sisters, Miss Josephine Whitman, and Mrs. K. C. Horsey.

Funeral services were conducted by the Rev. Mr. Twilley of Allen Md. interment was in Parsons Cemetery. Mr. Whitman was not a native here but had resided in this city for about six years. Mr. Whitman was a Christian gentleman and had made many friends here.

Funeral services will be held at 2 o'clock, Sunday, August 4, at the residence of the family, 1011 E. St., Salisbury.

10,000,000 SHIPPING TONS A YEAR

Yards 64 P. C. Ahead In Building In June.

Shipping tonnage production is today 64 per cent in excess of the most favorable and hopeful estimates made by the United States shipping board, with only the western yards heard from. With the entering of the great eastern shipyards upon their stride by the end of this year, the United States will turn out 10,000,000 tons annually.

Director General Schwab, of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, brought this cheering message with him when he returned from a month's tour of the shipyards on the Pacific coast.

During June alone, 232,000 tons of shipping, completed entirely, were delivered. The most optimistic estimates by shipping experts called for the production of 172,000 tons for June. Mr. Schwab, in calling attention to the excess 110,000 tons, declared that it was only the work of the western yards; that the great yard at Hog Island and other eastern yards were not included at all.

In addition, Mr. Schwab pointed out that the United States itself had furnished during June three-quarters of the amount of allied tonnage sunk by the Hun U-boats. With all the yards going at top-notch speed within a few months and the efficiency of the U-boats diminishing as a result of the allied convoy system, the master shipbuilder declares that the tonnage superiority furnished by the United States will be insuperable.

To insure an adequate supply of steel for the shipyards of the country, Director Schwab, immediately upon his arrival here called a conference in New York Monday, of representatives of all the big steel plants. Four million tons of steel annually must be had to keep the shipyards at full speed. At present only about 3,000,000 tons are being supplied.

Prohibition of all steel shipments to foreign countries is the first step planned in the creation of the needed supply.

Although enough steel is being furnished by the steel plants to fill the actual needs of the shipyards, still Mr. Schwab intends that an advance supply of 60,000 tons of steel in each of the country's shipyards be available as the "cushion" or working capital of steel.

"I am going to tell the steel men on Monday what I want," said the master shipbuilder yesterday, "and they simply must get it for me. That's all there is to it. And they'll come across in splendid American style I am sure."

"Give us the steel, we will build the ships, is the cry that we heard all through our trip. And they're going to get that steel, too, you can bet."

Speaking of the report from Washington Wednesday that the government had taken control of the turbine manufacturing plants of the country, Mr. Schwab said that the situation would not be affected by the change since shipyards were getting all the turbines they needed.

Mr. Schwab was enthusiastic over the record made by the Pacific coast shipyards. The latter have been turning out 300,000 tons per month.

"The west is producing, and they're going to produce," he said. "They've got the spirit to win or die out there, and are giving us all they've got."

OUT-DOOR BAND CONCERTS

Last Friday Evening Draws Large Audience.

2500 people attended the out-door band concert of last week. People from all sections of the county and adjacent counties were here to listen to the splendid address made by Rev. J. T. Herson. The vocal selections rendered by Miss Grace Elliott of Delmar were very much enjoyed, and many favorable comments were heard regarding the solo and chorus in which Miss Elliott was assisted by the following young ladies: Misses Gertrude Gordy and Elsie Hearn of Delmar, Hilda Kennerly of Mardela Springs and Gladys Cleary of Salisbury.

The music rendered by the band was fine and thoroughly enjoyed by everyone, and the boys are to be congratulated on their excellent work. The band concerts during the month of August will be held on Thursday evenings instead of Friday evenings. The chairman of the committee on these out-door concerts, Mr. H. W. Carty, also Publicity Manager of the Business Men's Association reports that they are expecting Dr. Haddaway of Baltimore City to address the meeting on the evening of August 8. Dr. Haddaway is the Field Director of the Maryland Council of Defense and is pastor of one of the largest churches in Baltimore City. These weekly occasions present an elegant

AMERICANS AND FRENCH GAIN ON 10-MILE FRONT

PARIS, Aug.—In an advance of about two miles on the Aisne-Marne front today, the Allied troops reached Cramoisselle and Cramaille on the southwestern part of the salient, capturing 600 prisoners.

LONDON, Aug. 1.—The Allies today delivered a new stroke over a ten-mile front between Bazancay, about four miles south of Soissons, to Seringes, north of Fere-en-Tardenois. The result was a considerable advance and the wiping out of the elbow in the line at Oulchy-le-Chateau, according to advices to the Evening Standard this afternoon.

Hill 205, to the east of Grand Rozoy, is said to be in the Allies' hands, which means an important step forward in the direction of Fismes, on the Vesle. From Hill 205 the citadel of Fismes is visible. Cramoisselle, a village some four miles northwest of Fere-en-Tardenois, also is reported captured.

To the east of the ten-mile attack the Americans have occupied the whole of Meunier wood southeast of Cierges.

Each Army Now Is Aiming At The Destruction Of The Other.

Washington, July 31.—The battle in the Aisne-Marne salient has developed into a life and death struggle between the opposing armies. More limited objectives which the Germans may have had in launching their attack at Rheims, or for which General Foch may have aimed in his counter-thrust, have been submerged in a greater struggle, the object of which on each side is the destruction of the opposing army.

TO KILL EACH OTHER OFF.

This interpretation of the battle was formerly presented today by General March, chief of staff, in his midweek conference with newspaper correspondents. Whatever was the original German purpose or the hopes that governed the Allied counter-evident that these have been set aside. The object of each army now is the other army: each is seeking to kill as many as possible.

In making this announcement, General March frankly admitted that the German resistance in holding apart the jaws of the salient had frustrated any hope of bagging any considerable portion of the German armies in the salient.

In two weeks' time, he pointed out, the enemy has had ample time to withdraw his advanced divisions and to perfect his defensive positions along the flattened front now established.

General March's statement was accepted as explaining reports that the Germans have concentrated nearly a million men on this narrow front and as disclosing the reason for the terrific fighting in which American forces have been engaged in the center of the battle front, where losses have not served to divert either side from the struggle for critical positions.

(By the Associated Press.)

With the American Army on the Aisne-Marne front, July 31. Efforts made by the Germans to advance their lines against the Americans on this front last night and this forenoon were fruitless. The Americans, for their part, were content to hold their positions along their slightly advanced line for the time. The German line, however, is reported gradually giving way both to the right and left.

HUNS CAUGHT IN TRAP.

During the night the Americans made a pretense of retreating from a part of the town of Seringes. The Germans advanced into the town, on observing the supposed evacuation. Two companies of Americans then closed in and enveloped the German force, killing or capturing every man of it.

There was hard fighting throughout the night, but no concentrated attack in force by either side. Both high explosives and gas shells were sprayed by the Germans over a wide area. The air forces on both sides were busy this morning. One of the American observers was attacked by eight enemy machines, but escaped and returned to his base.

CURCULIO JARRED FROM TREE

Wheelbarrow Umbrella Catcher is Usually Used—Insects Can be Caught in Sheets.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)
Certain insects, notably the plum and quince curculios, may be much reduced in numbers by regularly jarring the trees, collecting the insects on sheets or special cloth-covered frames. Jarring peach and plum trees was at one time the principal method of control of the curculio and was in vogue until rather recently. On stone fruits, however, jarring has now almost completely fallen into disuse in favor of spraying with arsenate of lead in self-bolled lime-sulphur mixture.

In the control of the quince curculio jarring is still practiced. The work is usually started early in the morning while the insects are sluggish and easily dislodged. A wheelbarrow umbrella catcher is mostly employed, though the curculios may be collected on sheets placed on the ground or held beneath the tree. A smart rap with a padded wooden mallet serves to bring the beetle down. The curculio lies upon falling legs and are easily collected and destroyed by dropping into a can containing kerosene. In using the specifically designed wheelbarrow umbrella catcher

SUMMING UP THE EVIDENCE.

Many Salisbury People Have Been Called As Witnesses.

Week after week has been published the testimony of Salisbury people—kidney sufferers—bachache victims—people who have endured many forms of kidney, bladder or urinary disorders. These witnesses have used Doan's Kidney Pills. All have given their enthusiastic approval. It's the same everywhere. 50,000 American men and women are publicly recommending Doan's—always in the home papers. Isn't it a wonderful, convincing mass of proof? If you are a sufferer your verdict must be "Try Doan's first."

Here's one more Salisbury case. John H. Connelly, 503 E. Isabella St., says: "When I went to Virginia, I was obliged to drink impure water and I began to suffer from my kidneys. My back also became weak. I used two boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills and they removed all the trouble. Occasional use of Doan's since has prevented a return attack. This medicine cannot be praised too highly."

Mr. Connelly is only one of many Salisbury people who have gratefully endorsed Doan's Kidney Pills. If your back aches—if your kidneys bother you, don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—ask distinctly for DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS, the same that Mr. Connelly had—the remedy backed by home testimony. 60 cents at all stores. #### GOOD TEAMS ARE VALUABLE

Mean More to Up-to-Date Farmer Than is Generally Believed—Plan to Raise Colts.

Good teams mean more to the up-to-date farmer than is generally believed. Without good teams it is a very difficult matter to do good farming. But at present prices farmers may hesitate to buy heavy draft horses and mules, notwithstanding the fact that they are after all economical. It would be a good plan to get some heavy mares and raise colts for sale or to take the place of lighter animals and old teams on the farm.

THIS milk and cream is from tuberculin-tested cows. The milk is cooled to a very low temperature immediately after milking, and bottled; milk is then stored until delivered in our refrigerator, which is kept just above the freezing point by the improved York expansion cooling system, which has recently been installed. Bottles are washed and sterilized before using, as are also all milk utensils.

The cows are thoroughly examined by a competent veterinary at short intervals. Herd is in charge of an expert in the feeding and care of dairy cattle. All is being done to produce a very high quality milk and cream and to serve the same in a satisfactory manner.

Come at any time and see for yourself how the milk is produced, and handled in a more sanitary manner.

'Twas False

By VINCENT G. PERRY.

(Copyright, 1918, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Arthur Thorne had argued until he was tired of arguing. There was no use trying to talk sense into a man who hadn't any, he thought at last, as he gave up with one more effort.

"I tell you she is young—just about twenty-one," he said hotly. "Because she is an actress you think she has to be old. There are some young actresses, aren't there?"

Mervin Benton, his companion, was quite willing to admit that there were but this one, he claimed, was not. "You can't tell me," he argued. "This Dora Fraleigh will never see thirty-five again. Her hair is false, I'm willing to wager anything. Did you ever see curls like hers that were real? Everything about her is false."

Arthur knew if he stayed he would become angry. Mervin was jealous—that was what was the matter, he felt.

Without another word Arthur left the bath-house where the conversation had been held and made for the beach. It was a glorious day and the guests of the hotel were making the best of the bathing weather. He caught sight of Dora almost immediately. Apparently she was searching for something in the water near the beach.

"What have you lost?" he asked, as he waded toward her.

"Oh, nothing," she answered a trifle confused. "Isn't the water fine?"

After completely immersing himself and swimming aimlessly about for a few seconds, Arthur agreed that it was. "Let's go out on the raft," he suggested, but Dora seemed unwilling to leave the shallow place. This was surprising, for she had always seemed anxious to get all the fun possible. There was something troubling her. She even seemed unwilling to go on the beach for a sun bath, but finally agreed.

"There!" Arthur exclaimed, as he stretched out on the sand. "I thought I never would get away from that shallow part. There were so many children there I didn't have a chance to talk with you."

"You usually have lots of opportunities," Dora smiled.

"What's this?" he asked, as he picked up something his toes had been rubbing against in the sand. "Well, look what's here! A false curl!" Sure enough it was.

Dora took it from him eagerly. "I lost it!" she exclaimed, as she jumped to her feet. "I was searching for it out there. Wait until I go and tell auntie. She'll be delighted."

She was off before Arthur could stop her. He looked after her with an exclamation of dismay on his lips. To think that those beautiful curls of hers were false. No wonder she hadn't talked much and had been confused. So Mervin had been right!

When Dora joined him again he was trying to smile, but found he couldn't. "What makes you so quiet?" she asked, after they had sat in silence for nearly five minutes.

"Nothing very much," he replied to her question. "I was thinking that I was going home tomorrow."

"Going home!" she echoed. "Why you said last week that you would be here all summer."

"I have changed my mind," he answered, but when he saw the pained look on Dora's face he wished he had thought up an excuse.

The next morning Arthur's resolve to go home had not faltered. He wasn't going to stay there to be the laughing stock of the whole hotel when they found out about Dora's age. He was only twenty-one and most likely she was thirty, anyway. Nine years was too much difference. He felt so uncomfortable over it he went to the station half an hour before the train was due to leave. His going away would leave the field open for Mervin. That was too much. He left the train in a hurry and left word with the baggage man to have his trunks sent back to the hotel. He couldn't be happy without Dora, even if she was eighty.

He found Dora in a secluded corner of the veranda. Her eyes were red and there were other traces of tears.

"You haven't gone yet," she cried joyfully, as she caught sight of him. "I heard that you had gone without even saying good-by to me."

"I came pretty nearly doing it, dear," he said, "but I couldn't go away and leave you here. When I go I want to take you with me. I want to marry you."

"If you wanted to marry me, why did you make me worry about your leaving so unexpectedly?" she asked, trying not to smile. "Last night was the second night I have lost sleep by worrying. The night before it was the thought of having lost auntie's best curl that—"

"Auntie's curl?" he interrupted.

"Yes, the curl you found yesterday." "Oh," Arthur groaned. "I thought that was your curl!"

"Mine!" she laughed. "And I was only twenty a week ago!"

"Thank goodness for that," he cried. "But why?" she asked, perplexed.

She laughed for a long time after he told her. "But what difference would it have made if I was thirty-five?" she said.

"None; but I'm glad you're only twenty," he replied.

Real Test.

"He loves the very ground she walks on."

"Does he love it well enough to plant a vegetable garden in it for her benefit?"

WHY PEOPLE LIVE IN CITIES

Subject Discussed in a Way That May Please or Not, According to One's Disposition.

In the American Magazine, Bruce Barton says, in talking about his old home town:

"Rousseau once remarked that he had never lived in Paris, except for one definite reason—to get money enough to live somewhere else. There are times when I have had a similar feeling toward New York. Times when the stress and strain and fretting of the job grew wearisome; when my cylinders all are full of carbon, and my valves give forth a leaky sound; when the white lights are only an impertinence, and the noise of motormen tramping on their bells is madness in my ears."

"When that time comes, as every spring it does, I go home, and, speaking with my wife privately, I say: 'My dear, why linger we longer in a world like this? We are but strangers here at best; Foxboro is our home.' And we fill up the cold coffee bottle and place the ham sandwich in the bag, nestling it tenderly beside the fishing tackle, and he is to a land that is better and purer and sweeter; where the straight and narrow way takes the place of the way called Broad, and there is no white light but the evening star."

SAVE AND HELP

Announcement this week is made of another Liberty Loan drive to commence in September, and it is time for our people to commence to prepare for it. The government will this time ask for more money than it has in any previous drive and this County's quota will be increased accordingly.

The best and the quickest way to get this war over is for each of us to do our full part towards helping the government, whether it be the loaning of money, the saving of foods, the building of ships, or something else we are asked to help in.

Many of us thought we had bought all the bonds we could possibly manage during the past drives, but somehow we have succeeded in taking more, and this time we must all prepare to come to the front and do our part. To buy bonds before some denied themselves of some pleasure or luxury, and there are still more things in the same class we can deny ourselves of this time and buy again.

This is the first of August and it is well to commence in time so when the drive comes we will know where we are and what we can do.

Our boys over in France are proving themselves to be the bravest and best soldiers of the world, so let those who are at home show that they likewise are willing to do their part and while not giving their all like the boys who are giving their lives, yet they will find a way to help all they can.

Cigars, tobacco, automobiles, pleasure rides, and a multitude of other things can be done without, why not commence now and let the government have the money otherwise thrown away.

WHAT WE FIGHT FOR.

The high aims of America and her allies are well expressed in President Wilson's greetings to France on Bastille day:

"As France celebrated our Fourth of July, so do we celebrate her Fourteenth, keenly conscious of a comradeship of arms and of purpose of which we are deeply proud. The sea seems very narrow to-day, France is so close neighbor to our hearts. The war is being fought to save ourselves from intolerable things, but it is also being fought to save mankind. We extend our hands to each other, to the great peoples with whom we are associated; and to the peoples everywhere who love right and prize justice as a thing beyond price, and consecrate ourselves once more to the noble enterprise of peace and justice, realizing the great conceptions that have lifted France and America high among the free peoples of the world. The French flag flies today from the staff of the White House, and America is happy to do honor to that flag."

PROCLAMATION

Proposing an Amendment to the Constitution of the State, Providing For Absent Voting.

Whereas, at the January session of the General Assembly of Maryland, Held in the year 1918, a Bill was passed, to wit: Chapter 20 of said Acts, proposing an additional section to Article 1 of the Constitution of Maryland, to be known as Section 1A and relating to Absent Voting, and which said Bill is in the words and figures following:

CHAPTER 20

An Act to propose an amendment to Article 1, title, "Elective Franchise," of the Constitution of the State of Maryland, by adding a new section thereto, to be known as Section 1A, the same relating to absent voting; and to provide for the submission of said amendment to the qualified voters of this State for adoption or rejection.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, that the members of each of the two Houses concurring, That the following new Section be, and the same is hereby proposed, as an Amendment to Article 1, title, "Elective Franchise," of the Constitution of the State of Maryland, to be inserted after Section 1, and to be known as Section 1A; the same, if adopted by the legally qualified voters of the State as herein provided, to become a part of Article 1 of the Constitution of Maryland.

Section 2. The General Assembly of Maryland shall have power to provide by suitable enactment for voting by qualified voters of the State of Maryland who are absent and engaged in the Military or Naval Service of the United States at the time of any election from the ward or election district in which they are entitled to vote, and for the manner in which and the time and place at which such absent voter may vote, and for the canvass and return of their votes.

Section 3. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That said foregoing Section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, shall be at the next General Election for Members of Congress held in this State submitted to the legal and qualified voters of the State for adoption or rejection, pursuant to the directions contained in Article XIV of the Constitution of this State, and at the said General Election the vote on the said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be printed the words "For the Constitutional Amendment" and "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as now provided by law, and after said election due returns shall be made to the Governor of the vote for and against said proposed amendment directed by said Fourteenth Article of the Constitution, and further proceedings had in accordance with said Article Fourteen.

Approved March 22, 1918.

Now, therefore, I, Hanson C. Harrington, Governor of the State of Maryland, in pursuance of the direction contained in Section 1 of Article 14 of the Constitution of Maryland do hereby order and direct that this Proclamation, containing a full, true and correct copy of the text of said Chapter 20 of the Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland, session of 1918, be published in at least two newspapers in each of the counties of the State where so many may be published, and where not more than one may be published, then in that newspaper, and in three newspapers published in the City of Baltimore, one of which shall be in the German language, once a week for at least three months next preceding the General Election to be held in the State of Maryland on Tuesday, November 5, 1918, at which election the said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be submitted to form and manner prescribed by the General Assembly, to the legal and qualified voters of the State for their adoption or rejection.

(The Great Seal of the State of Maryland.) Given under my hand and the Great Seal of the State of Maryland, this 22nd day of March, A.D. 1918.

Two young men came near losing their lives in the surf at Ocean City Sunday last. One of these was Mr. Earle Hastings, employed at the Homestead Dairy Farm, and the other young man was named Parsons, from Washington. Both young men had to be rescued by the Coast Guard and brought to the Shore for resuscitation. These are the first near-accidents recorded at Ocean City this summer.

Many housewives have learned from sad experiences in loss of perishable foods that next to the ice is not the coldest place in the home refrigerator.

To the housewife who has not had this experience the Food Administration gives this advice: "Many put butter and milk right next to the ice because they think this is the coldest place, but as a matter of fact the coldest place is at the bottom of the refrigerator. Hot air rises, and air that is not being constantly purified by circulation around the block of ice soon are unfit to come into contact with the food. When the warm air in the refrigerator rises it carries with it impurities and moisture which are absorbed from the surface of the food, and which if allowed to remain in the air spoils the food."

Miss Kathleen Nealey is the guest of friends in Washington, D. C.

Miss Madeline Tull is visiting relatives in Baltimore.

Mrs. Harry S. Waller and Miss Cornelia Waller have returned from a visit to Richmond, Va.

The School Board has set August 2nd, 2.30 p. m. to hear the advocates of consolidating the Clara and White Haven Schools.

Mrs. E. Wilton Merrick and two daughters, Beverly and Bessie, of Salisbury, are visiting Mrs. Clement G. Robers.—Cambridge Record.

A Nurse's recruiting tent has been pitched on the court house lawn and efforts will be made to enlist the services of several young ladies in the service of the government. The tent will be open day from 10 to 12 a. m., 4 to 6 p. m., and 8 to 10 p. m. Special literature will be found awaiting those who are willing to offer their services to the government at this time. Young ladies are sought for the Nurses' Reserve Corps so as to release several hundred trained nurses whose services are badly needed overseas. It is hoped that several of Wicomico's young ladies will offer their services at this critical time in the war.

Works Like a Hoe Covers 8 Acres A Day

It does as good work as you can do with a hoe—it cuts every weed—none can dodge it—Keeps the surface in condition to readily absorb rain and produces a mulch or dirt blanket of fine soil which prevents the escape of soil moisture. One trip to the row, whether narrow or wide.

THE Fowler Progressive Farmer's Cultivator

With one man The Fowler does as much work as you can do with a two horse cultivator—and better work—because it cultivates shallow—has no prongs or teeth to destroy or disturb the crop roots. You can work right up to the plant with a Fowler. By removing plow foot you can cultivate astride the row.

You need this now.

Order direct or through your dealer. We give service that counts.

"Andy, Old Girl"

By IMES MACDONALD

(Copyright, 1918, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Cassandra Andrews had done everything she could think of. She had worn her most becoming blouses and her best stockings—she had spent hours doing her hair and brushing her eyebrows and polishing her nails, but a whole school year had almost disposed of itself and the young professor of English literature had never seemed to notice her at all. Before and after class he joked and jollied with other girls. The vivacious Roberta Stevens nearly always stopped at his desk for a moment of chatter—Bertha Marvin, the class beauty, the athletic Agnes Burns and a dozen others were on the friendliest terms with him, but Cassandra Andrews slipped demurely into her seat four mornings a week, apparently unnoticed.

"They're all crazy about him," she thought scornfully, as she watched the professor's reception before class one morning. "Every single one of them!" After the professor had delivered his lecture that morning, there was a general discussion and he called on her for an opinion on a certain passage. She arose diffidently, offering her little statement of disagreement with the generally accepted theory. And right there is where the professor made his first mistake. He smiled a tolerant, skeptical sort of smile, the trend of which Cassandra Andrews caught immediately, and she leaned forward impudently and flatly contradicted his comment. Then she followed up the contradiction with a tumble of words in support of her own opinion and sat speedily down again.

The professor was surprised. "Well," he said, crisply, "I'm glad that at least one student in the class thinks for herself. I was afraid you were all sheep."

On the instant the bell rang and the girls arose and passed out in chattering groups, congregating in the court outside with light-hearted banter.

"We're all sheep but you, Andy, dear," sang out Edna Phray, dancing up to Cassandra delightedly. "And you are a blessed lamb, but you'll grow. I never knew you had so much spunk. Where do you keep it?"

And the two of them strolled off together, arranging to play tennis in the late afternoon. Later that day the professor of English and his cronies, the professor of economics, sought the courts for their regular afternoon's tennis bout. The English professor patted a ball aimlessly into the net while his contemporary changed his shoes.

"Guess I've got a touch of spring fever," he said, absently watching Edna and Cassandra tightening the net three courts over. And right there the professor of English made his second mistake. "I feel," he said, "almost frivolous enough to suggest mixed doubles. What do you say, Bill?"

And Bill, the economics expert, waved his racket, and called across to the girls: "Want to make it doubles?" The girls drew together for an instant's consultation, and then assented, walking over to the court where the two men were.

"How'll ye pair off?" demanded Professor Bill.

"Well," said Edna Phray, practically, "I hate English and I love economics—and I'm very temperamental." The professor of economics grinned as the two of them moved toward the other side of the net.

"But," continued Edna, significantly to the professor of English, "I'm a better tennis player than Cassandra Andrews, even if I am a sheep."

Whereat the professor of English shouted with laughter.

Cassandra glanced at her stalwart partner at those words and in her young heart there leaped a mighty flame, the golden points of which shone in her shining brown eyes. She forgot everything but the game. She darted about, diving across the court and smashing her return drives like a little fiend. Twice she collided with her partner and shot him a dazzling little glance as she flung her head back to shake the hair out of her eyes. Time after time the professor of English shouted at her, "Good girl!" after a particularly difficult shot, and her spirit soared on the wings of the wind with the professor's not far behind. She had forgotten that she had worn her best stockings, but they were so much in evidence that it was fortunate that she wore them, for the professor was getting more observant every moment of the afternoon.

At the beginning of the third set they were even, with a set apiece. Then the couple in economics settled down and won four straight games. They lost the next and then won again, so that the score was five to one against Cassandra and the professor of English.

"Easy money," jeered Professor Bill. "We need only one more game!" "You can't do it," taunted the flaming Cassandra. "We must win!" she said eagerly to the professor of English. "We must—we must!"

"You'll kill yourself," he protested. "What does it matter?" she said, crouching to receive Professor Bill's twisting service. "What does it matter—if one can die winning?" And she flung her tired body victoriously into a smashing stroke and rushed to the net.

During November, the United States mints coined 77,000,000 pennies, 18,000,000 dimes and 11,000,000 nickels to meet the holiday trade demand.

Last year there were 150 strikes in Japan, involving 50,000 workers, compared with 30 strikes involving 3,000 workers in the year before.

And so they fought on and on winning the next five games.

"One more!" she gasped breathlessly, and played on.

Five times that last and deciding game went to deuce, and then came the shot—the shot that stood between victory and possible defeat—and she made it. Leaping high in the air she smashed the ball in a gray streak down the alley, and the game was won!

"Game—set—and match! Whee!" shouted the professor of English. "Great work, Andy, old girl!" And he patted his drooping little partner on the shoulder.

The racket slipped from her exhausted grasp and she swayed weakly. "We won!" she murmured, and would have fallen if the professor hadn't put his arm about her and led her to a bench.

"Why, you blessed lamb, you, Andy Andrews," said Edna Phray, sitting beside her and shaking her by the shoulders. "I never knew you to play such tennis. The lamb has turned tiger-cat," she laughed up at the two men, who stood over them.

"Don't maul me, Eddie," protested Cassandra, feebly; "I'm all in," and then she smiled up at the professor, her professor. "But we won, didn't we?"

"You won," he said. "I didn't, because you played some tennis yourself."

The next morning she slipped into her seat demurely as usual. As usual, too, there was a cluster of girls grouped about the professor's desk, chattering gaily. But then, what did she care? Hadn't he called her "Andy, old girl," only yesterday? And she smiled in prim superiority. And when the recitation was over he would have detained her a moment, but she ignored the intention with a fine indifference and passed out with the rest.

For a week she avoided him successfully, then late one afternoon he met her face to face on the campus.

"And what did I ever do to you?" he demanded when she would have spoken calmly and passed on.

"You called me 'Andy, old girl,'" she said grimly, "and I've hated you ever since."

"You're not going to bite me, are you, Andy, old girl?" grinned the professor of English.

She could maintain her gravity no longer and little sparks of gold flickered in her brown eyes. "I'll try not to," she murmured with a little laugh, agilely dodging the eager sweep of his arm.

And then the professor threw his dignity out of the window and started in pursuit through the trees, catching her right where she'd planned he should, in a narrow and secluded path.

Then after he had kissed her, she reached up and clutched his head between her hands, shaking it fiercely. "And remember," she said between her clenched teeth, "I will not be called 'Andy, old girl.' I won't love you any more if you call me that. I hate it."

"All right, you darling Andy, old girl," chuckled the professor.

But when he kissed her again she only clung to him eagerly. Queer thing, a woman!

PUZZLED BY QUEER NAMES

Writer Finds It Hard to Understand Why Parents "Impose Burden" on Their Children.

What extraordinary names some people are compelled to bear, or choose to assume! I hesitate to call them "Christian names," because they aren't Christian, very often. "Given names" is perhaps the better way of describing them. Perhaps you have heard of the Irishman assisting at a baptism, who, when he heard the godmother answer "Hazel" to the question as to the child's name, broke forth: "For the love of hiven! the whole calendar is full of the names of blessed female saints, and they do be callin' the baby after a saint!"

I thought of that when I looked through the catalogue of a girls' college the other day, and noted these labels: Golde Mae, Eura, Arvill, Kathryn, Elva, Melba, Iser, Neva, Ramona, Mabelle, Vidah, Esta, Millis, Mayme, Mable, Arthetta, Lilyan, Bulah, Arbitta, Narmie, Ara, Jonnie, Roxa, Zurelle, Zullene, Vanja, Mote, Corena. It was a comfort to get back to Bridget and Margaret! Names are not arbitrary combinations of vowels and consonants; they have, or should have, significance, a historic setting, a personal and family relationship, that dignifies them.

To invent fantastic labels for pet dogs may be allowed; but human beings ought not to be put on that level. So misspellings of familiar names, Christian or family, seem either undignified or ignorant, now when fixed spellings have been accepted. Can some one explain Ga Nun and U'Rell, both of which variants fatigue me—Living Church.

Buffalo as Beast of Burden.

The buffalo has always been rated as untamable and many scientists have regarded him as one of the most stupid beasts that ever existed. It has remained for Maj. Bob Yokum of Pierre, S. D., after five years of effort, to accomplish the wonderful feat of training a pair of buffaloes to trot to wagon, and also to do many other remarkable stunts. Major Yokum is a former United States marshal and is known in the old ranching and cowboy life of the American West, from Kansas to Oregon. One of the accomplishments of the Yokum team is to race against horses, and they distance their speedy competitors. They loathe the saddling process and when the rider mounts them will "buck" in a way to shame a veteran broncho.—St. Nicholas.

THE DREAM GIRL

By LOUISE OLIVER.

(Copyright, 1918, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

When the car gave a lurch which sent Jack with great force against some one behind him, and he turned to apologize, he almost lost his breath with surprise. For there smiling with amusement was the girl he had been dreaming about.

Jack was no sentimentalist. He was not given to dreaming at all—much. Only this girl had got into his head some way, how, he couldn't have told, and he took to dreaming about her.

One night at training camp he had awakened suddenly in the barracks to find a dozen fellows bending over him "listening in."

"Sweetheart!" One grinning soul had mocked. "Dee—ar little sweetheart! Oh, mamma!"

"Don't worry, darling. How can I get killed when you're waiting for me," sang another, waving his arms and dancing around on one leg.

"You devils!" cried Jack, springing up. Of the dozen men in his barracks, he was probably the only one who didn't have a real sweetheart.

So now was it any wonder that he was too paralyzed with amazement to make the apology he had begun, and colored like a girl under his tan? His eyes held hers for quite several seconds before he remembered. "I beg your pardon," he said, his hand to his cap. "I hope I didn't hurt you."

"No," she said kindly, "you didn't."

"It's too bad a woman has to stand," declared Jack. "If you say so I'll pick up anybody you choose, and you may have his seat."

"No, thank you. I like to stand."

"Thank you very much."

"Thank you very much."

may help carry if you wish."

And so Jack and the girl arrived at Casey's, laden like caravan camels.

"Now, you tell Mr. Casey a few funny stories to cheer him up," said the girl, "while I make a hot poultice, and put things in the kitchen to rights."

So Lieutenant Jack and the dream girl stayed all afternoon at the Casey's. By five o'clock the little house was in order, dinner ready, and a neighbor installed to serve it.

"Can't I call a taxicab?" asked Jack, when they were ready to depart. "The cars are so crowded now."

"No," she refused. "I either walk or use street cars everywhere I go now. War times!" she reminded.

"But you spent a fortune on those people this afternoon."

"That's it, don't you see. I have where I can. It's a little game of my own."

When he put her on the car, she said out her hand. "Thank you, oh so much, for all you've done today. Perhaps another day I may ask your assistance. But you see I don't know yet who you are."

He gave her a card. "I'm only home another week," he said. "Make it soon, won't you? But won't you tell me your name, now?"

"And isn't it funny," she said teasingly, after a second's hesitation, "I haven't any. Just call me the Dream Girl."

That night Jack was going over some sport things he was packing away, and unfolded an old newspaper full of fish hooks, reels and flies, he had brought home in the spring from a fishing trip. And there was a full page picture of the Dream Girl! He understood it now. His brain had not manufactured her. He had seen her in the paper and his subconscious self had retained the impression.

"Miss Dorothy Armor, daughter of Frank Hamilton Armor, capitalist and philanthropist," ran the note underneath. "Richest girl in the city does war work, and won't use motor cars, buys hand-me-down clothes, and turns entire income over to various societies for relief." The telephone rang.

"If you'll not be too busy in the morning, I think I can use you," said Dorothy's voice. "Can you come?"

"Delighted," he cried. "Can't I go this evening and talk it over?"

"Yes," came her voice graciously. "I was hoping you'd say that."

Design Frustrated.

"Pardon me for referring to the matter, Glittherby, but you borrowed $50 from me some time ago."

"By Jove, so I did."

"So—just at present I'm—"

"And I want to take this opportunity to tell you, Dubwite, that I have remarked to I don't know how many of my friends and acquaintances that you are the biggest-hearted, most considerate fellow I ever knew—the kind of

INTERESTING LECTURE AT TENT WEDNESDAY

Why Millions Observe Sunday Instead of Saturday, Discussed By Mr. Andross.

Mr. Andross does not believe that we have any warrant for observing Sunday, the first day of the week, as a Sabbath. He said, in his discourse at the tent Wednesday "The first day of the week is mentioned just eight times in the New Testament, but in no instance is it called Sabbath or said to be holy, nor are we commanded to observe that day for any reason whatsoever." The speaker then read the eight references relating to the first day of the week, to show the practice of Christ and the apostles regarding the matter, and said:

"There are some facts about the first day of the week, Sunday, which all should be informed of. They are, first—

"Christ rose from the dead on that day. Mark 16: 9; Matt. 28: 1; Mark 16: 7; John 20: 1. But He did not say that it was therefore the Sabbath.

"The women brought spices to the grave of the Saviour on that day. Luke 24: 1. Which they would not do on the Sabbath. See Luke 23: 56.

"Christ appeared to His disciples on that day, the doors being shut for fear of the Jews. John 20: 19. They were not assembled to keep the Sabbath, but had closed the doors for personal safety.

"Paul once preached on the evening of the first day (Acts 20: 4), corresponding with our Saturday night. But the next morning, answering to our Sunday morning, he continued his journey toward Jerusalem.

"The New Testament records seven religious meetings conducted by the apostles on the Sabbath after the resurrection of Christ.

"Paul, in writing to the Corinthians in behalf of the poor at Jerusalem, said, 'Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him.' 1 Cor. 16: 2. This was not a public donation, but a private setting apart. Notice, Paul said 'lay by him' or as many translations render it, 'lay by himself at home'.

"The foregoing are ALL the texts which speak of the 'first day of the week'. There are just eight of them. But they prove nothing at all in favor of Sunday as a sabbath. Carefully examined, they prove the reverse.

"Matthew 28: 1 declares the Sabbath 'ends' before the first day can dawn. Mark 16: 1-2 asserts that the 'Sabbath was past' when the first day came; while Luke 23: 54 and 24: 1 presents three days, one following the other. First comes the preparation day, then the Sabbath, and then 'the first day of the week'. The Sabbath here referred to is the one according to the commandment.

"It appears as a wonderful coincidence that the Sabbath is placed by the divine spirit between these two days. The Mohammedan world has selected Friday for their Sabbath, others have chosen Sunday, the resurrection day, for their Sabbath. Neither of these days has any sanctity or sacredness of its own, but from the Sabbath they steal their garb of piety, while the day between these two, the Sabbath, is crucified every week of time. But just as surely as Christ arose and triumphed gloriously, so the Sabbath will triumph at last.

"That the first day of the week could not possibly be the Sabbath, is further shown from the fact that Jesus, by His own blood, was to seal up the New Testament or Covenant. Heb. 9: 15-16. The principal involved in sealing a testament or will is clearly set forth in the sacred Word. Gal. 3: 15. After a will has been executed and the testator has died, there never can be a change in that will. To add to the will after death of the testator is but the work of a forger, and the addition must be considered as a fraud and forgery.

"Before Jesus died, He inserted in His New Testament or will every thing He wished the church to have. Thus baptism and the sacraments were all taught and observed both by Christ and his disciples previous to his death, for nothing could be added to the will after the testator died. Now where did Christ observe or command the observance of the 'first day' previous to His death? Was it ever taught or observed previous to His death? If not, then it has no part in the New Testament.

"They kept the seventh day, the Sabbath of the commandment, both before and after the death of Christ: Exodus 20: 8-11 and Luke 23: 54-56 and 24: 1. So we find the 'first day of the week' come just two late to be in the New Testament, and is therefore a fraud and forgery. From this conclusion, there is no escape."

Pittsburgh, Pa.—"For many months I was not able to do my work owing to a weakness which caused backache and headaches. A friend called my attention to one of your newspaper advertisements and immediately my husband bought three bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for me. After taking two bottles I felt fine and my troubles caused by that weakness are a thing of the past. All women who suffer as I did should try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

Mrs. J. A. Romano, 620 Knapp St., N. E., Pittsburgh, Pa.

Women who suffer from any form of weakness, as indicated by displacements, inflammation, ulceration, irregularities, backache, headaches, nervousness or "the blues," should accept Mrs. Robinson's suggestion and give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a thorough trial.

For over forty years it has been correcting such ailments. If you have mysterious complications write for advice to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

WHY MILLIONS KEEP SUNDAY INSTEAD OF SATURDAY

With the aid of about fifty stereopticon pictured texts and historical quotations, Evangelist Andross last Sunday night at the tent answered the question so frequently asked today, "Why Millions Keep Sunday Instead of Saturday?" The speaker had a large and attentive audience as he traced the manner in which the change came about—i. e. from the observance of Saturday—the seventh day of the week as stated in the commandments, to the keeping of Sunday—the first day of the week. Mr. Andross stated that in fulfillment of the prophecy of Daniel the seventh chapter "he shall think to change the times and the law." (Revised Version), the Catholic Church had substituted Sunday for the Sabbath of God. The speaker then said:

"Probably all within the hearing of my voice, sometime during their childhood, learned the ten commandments, and possibly when you come to the fourth commandment you wondered why everyone kept Sunday—the first day of the week, tho the commandment plainly said 'the seventh-day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God'. Many children ask their parents just this question. It is a fair question and demands a fair answer.

"In the first place, Christ said, 'Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill. For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled.' Matt. 5:17-18. Or what is the same thing, not so much as the dot of an 'i' or the cross of a 't' shall pass from the law. John tells us, 'Blessed are they that do His commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in thru the gates to the city.' Rev. 22:14. The commandments of God will then be kept by the people of God clear up to the time when they enter the city of God. Hence we cannot account for the change on any supposition that God has changed or abrogated the law.

"That Christians are bound to obey the ten commandments, the moral law of God, is taught by the leading denominations. In 'The Methodist Discipline', Article 6, we read:

'No Christian whatever is free from the obedience of the Commandments which are called moral.'

'Our Baptist brethren tell us, 'We believe that the law of God is the eternal and unchangeable rule of His moral government; that it is holy, just, and good.' Baptist Church Manual, p. 55. Art. 12.

'In the 'Presbyterian Confession of Faith', Chapter 18, p. 82, Art. 5, we read:

'The Moral Law doth forever bind all, as well justified persons as others, to the obedience thereof; and that not only in regard to the matter contained in it, but also in respect of the authority of God the Creator who gave it. Neither doth Christ in the gospel in any way dissolve, but much strengthen, this obligation.'

"But the prophet Daniel foretold the coming of an ecclesiastical power which should 'think to change the times and the law'. (Dan. 7:25. R. V.) In this vision Daniel was first shown four great beasts—a lion, a bear, a leopard, and a ferocious non-descript beast with ten horns. The angel told Daniel that these represented four kingdoms that would rule over the earth, and that the ten horns were ten kings or kingdoms that would follow the fourth world kingdom. History tells us that there were just four world kingdoms from the time of Daniel—Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, and Rome, and that Rome was divided into just ten kingdoms by the northern barbarians between the years 351 and 476 A. D. Then the prophet saw in vision 'another little horn before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots'. Dan. 7:8. The angel told Daniel 'He shall speak great words against the most High, and shall wear out the saints of the most High; and he shall think to change the times and the law; and they shall be given into his hand until a time and times and half a time.' (Dan. 7:25. R. V.)

"Rev. Thomas W. Haskins, M. A., an Episcopalian writer says, 'As the temporal power of the Papacy exactly fits the symbols, and no other power growing out of the Roman Empire does, here the Papacy is undoubtedly indicated.' All protestant commentators agree that this little horn is without any doubt the symbol of the Roman Catholic Papacy. I know of no reason for not accepting this application of the prophecy. History is too replete with evidences of the accurate fulfillment of the prophecy by the Papacy for any Protestant to have any doubt whatever regarding the matter.

"But has the Papacy thought to change the Law of God? We have but to look at any ordinary Catholic catechism to see that the second commandment is missing, the fourth curtailed to about a line, and the tenth divided into two, thus bringing the number of commandments back to ten.

"The only commandment that has to do with time is the Sabbath commandment. This the Catholics boast of having changed. In the 'Convert's Catechism of Catholic Doctrine', by Rev. Peter Geirman, C. SS. R., P. 50, third edition, 1913, a work which received the 'apostolic blessing' of Pope Pius X, Jan. 25, 1910, we read as follows:

'Question—Which is the Sabbath day?

'Answer—Saturday is the Sabbath day.

'Question—Why do we observe Sunday instead of Saturday?

'Answer—We observe Sunday instead of Saturday because the Catholic Church, in the Council of Laodicea (A. D. 336), transferred the solemnity from Saturday to Sunday.'

"In the 'Catholic World' of March 1874 the following statement was made: 'She (the Catholic Church) took the Pagan Sunday and made it the Christian Sunday.' Thus the Bible predicted that the Papacy would 'think to change the times and the Law' and now this ecclesiastical power claims to have done that very thing. Sunday is based on the same authority as Good Friday, Ash Wednesday, Palm Sunday, etc. If we accept one, why not be consistent like the Catholics and keep all? The famous historian Neander says, 'The festival SUN-DAY, like all other festivals, was always ONLY A HUMAN ORDINANCE; and it was FAR FROM THE INTENTION OF THE APOSTLES to establish a divine command in this respect, far from them, and from the early apostolic church, to transfer the laws of the SABBATH to SUN-DAY.' Church History. Ross's Translation, p. 188.

"Dwight's Theology (Presbyterian), Vol. 4, p. 401, says, 'The Christian (Sunday) Sabbath is NOT IN SCRIPTURE, and was NOT by the primitive Church called the Sabbath.'

"Dr. Blunt states in his 'Theological Compendium', p. 190, (Methodist), was now passing I realized that I must be in the outskirts of the big city which the Belgian had mentioned and where I was to procure a passport.

OUTWITTING THE HUN

Village after village I passed, and although I tried to skirt them wherever possible I realized that I would never make much progress if I continued that course. To gain a mile I would sometimes have to make a detour of two or three. I decided that I would try my luck in going straight through the next village I came to.

As I approached it, I passed numbers of peasants who were ambling along the road. I was afraid to mingle with them because it was impossible for one to talk to them and it was dangerous to arouse suspicion even among the Belgians. For all I knew, one of them might be treacherous enough to deliver me to the Germans in return for the reward he might be sure of receiving.

About 9 o'clock that evening I came to a point where ahead of me on the right was a Belgian police station—I knew it from its red lights—and on the other side of the street were two German soldiers in uniform leaning against a bicycle.

Here was a problem which called for instant decision: If I turned back the suspicion of the soldiers would be instantly aroused and if I crossed the road so as not to pass so closely to them they might be equally suspicious. I decided to march bravely by the Huns, bluff my way through and trust to Providence. If anybody imagines, however, that I was at all comfortable as I approached these soldiers, he must think I am a much braver man than I claim to be. My heart beat so loud I was afraid they would hear it. Every step I took brought me so much nearer to what might prove to be the end of all my hopes. It was a nerve-racking ordeal.

I was now within a few feet of them. Another step and—They didn't turn a hair! I passed right by them—heard that they were saying, although, of course, I didn't understand it, and went right on. I can't say I didn't walk a little faster as I left them behind, but I tried to maintain an even gait so as not to give them any idea of the inward exultation I was experiencing. No words can explain, however, how relieved I really felt—to know that I had successfully passed through the first of a series of similar tests which I realized were in store for me—although I did not know then how soon I was to be confronted with the second.

As it was, however, the incident gave me a world of confidence. It demonstrated to me that there was nothing in my appearance at any rate to attract the attention of the German soldiers. Apparently I looked like a Belgian peasant, and if could only work things so that I would never have to answer questions and thus give away my nationality, I figured I would be tolerably safe.

As I marched along I felt so happy I couldn't help humming an air of one of the new patriotic songs that we used to sing at the air-drome back in Ypres.

In this happy frame of mind I covered the next three miles in about an hour and then came to another little village. My usual course would have been to go around it—through fields, back yards, woods or whatever else lay in my way—but I had gained so much time by going through the last village instead of detouring around it and my appearance seemed to be so unsuspicious that I decided to try the same stunt again.

I stopped humming and kept very much on the alert, but apart from that, I walked boldly through the main street without any feeling of alarm.

I had proceeded perhaps a mile along the main street when I noticed ahead of me three German soldiers standing at the curb.

Again my heart started to beat fast. I must confess, but I was not nearly so scared as I had been an hour or so before.

I walked ahead, determined to follow my previous procedure in every particular.

I had got to about fifteen feet away from the soldiers when one of them stepped onto the sidewalk and shouted:

"Halt!"

My heart stopped beating fast—for a moment, I believe, it stopped beating altogether! I can't attempt to describe my feelings. I thought that the jig was up—that all I had gone through and all I had escaped would now avail me nothing, mingled with the feeling of disgust with myself because of the foolish risk I had taken in going through the writing as the soldier advanced to the spot where I stood rooted in my tracks.

I had a bottle of water in one pocket and a piece of bread in the other, and as the Hun advanced to search me I held the bottle up in one hand and the piece of bread in the other so that he could see that was all I had.

It occurred to me that he would "frisk" me—that is, feel me over for arms or other weapons, then place me under arrest and march me off to the guardhouse. I had not the slightest idea but that I was captured and there didn't seem to be much use in resisting, unarmed as I was and with two other German soldiers within a few feet of us.

Like a flash it suddenly dawned on me, however, that for all this soldier could have known I was only a Belgian peasant and that his object in searching me, which he proceeded to do, was to ascertain whether I had committed the common "crime" of smuggling potatoes.

The Belgians were allowed only a certain amount of potatoes, and it is against the laws laid down by the Huns to deal in vegetables of any kind except under the rigid supervision of the authorities. Nevertheless, it was one of the principal vocations of the average poor Belgian to buy potatoes out in the country from peasants and then smuggle them into the large cities and sell them clandestinely at a high price.

To stop this traffic in potatoes, the German soldiers were in the habit of subjecting the Belgians to frequent search, and I was being held up by this soldier for no other reason than that he thought I might be a potato smuggler!

He felt of my outside clothes and pockets, and finding no potatoes seemed to be quite satisfied. Had he but known who I was he could have earned an iron cross! Or, perhaps, in view of the fact that I had a heavy water bottle in my uplifted hand, it might have turned out to be a wooden cross!

He said something in German, which, of course, I did not understand, and then some Belgian peasants came along and seemed to distract his attention. Perhaps he had said: "It's all right; you may go on," or he may have been talking to the others in Flemish, but at any rate, observing that he was more interested in the others than he was in me at the moment, I put the bottle in my pocket and walked on.

After I walked a few steps, I took a furtive glance backward and noticed the soldier who had searched me rejoin his comrades at the curb and then stop another fellow who had come along, and then I disappeared in the darkness.

I cannot say that the outcome of this adventure left me in the same confident frame of mind that followed the earlier one. I was sure I had come out of it all right, but I could not help thinking what a terribly close shave I had.

Suppose the soldier had questioned me! The ruse I had been following in my dealings with the Belgian peasants—pretending I was deaf and dumb—might possibly have worked here, too, but a soldier—a German soldier—might not so easily have been fooled. It was more than an even chance that it would have at least aroused his suspicion and resulted in further investigation. A search of my clothing would have revealed a dozen things which would have established my identity and all my shaming of deafness would have availed me nothing.

As I wandered along I knew that I was now approaching the big city which my Belgian friend had spoken of and which I would have to enter if I was to get the passport, and I realized now how essential it was to have something to enable me to get through the frequent examinations to which I expected to be subjected.

While I was still debating in my mind whether it was going to be possible for me to enter the city that night, I saw in the distance what appeared to be an ear of light, and as I neared it that was what it turned out to be. Beneath the light I could make out the forms of three guards, and the thought of having to go through the same kind of ordeal that I had just experienced filled me with misgivings. Was it possible that I could be fortunate enough to get by again?

As I slowed up a little, trying to make up my mind what was best to do, I was overtaken by a group of Belgian women who were shuffling along the road, and I decided to mingle with them and see if I couldn't convey figures of those three soldiers with their spiked helmets loomed before like a regiment. I felt as if I were walking right into the jaws of death. Rather than go through what was in store for me, I felt that I would infinitely prefer to be fighting again in the air with those four desperate Huns who had been the cause of my present plight—then, at least, I would have a chance to fight back, but now I had to risk my life and take what was coming to me without a chance to strike a blow in my own defense.

I shall never forget my feelings as we came within the shaft of light projected by that great ear of light nor the faces of those three guards as we passed by them. I didn't look directly at them, but out of the corner of my eye I never missed a detail. I held a handkerchief up to my face as we passed them and endeavored to imitate the slouching gait of the Belgians as well as I could, and apparently it worked. We walked right by those guards and they paid absolutely no attention to us.

If ever a fellow felt like going down on his knees and praying I did at that moment, but it wouldn't have done to show my elation or gratitude in that conspicuous way.

It was then well after 11 o'clock and I knew it would be unwise for me to attempt to find a lodging place in the city, and the only thing for me to do was to locate the man whose name the Belgian had given me. He had given me a good description of the street and had directed me how to get there, and I followed his instructions closely.

After walking the streets for about half an hour, I came upon one of the landmarks my friend had described to me and ten minutes afterwards I was knocking at the door of the man who was to make it possible to reach Holland—and liberty!—at, that was what I hoped.

CHAPTER XII.

The Forged Passport.

For obvious reasons, I cannot describe the man to whom I applied for the passport nor the house in which he lived. While, in view of what subsequently happened, I would not be very much concerned if he got into trouble for having dealt with me, I realize that the hardships he had endured in common with the other inhabitants of that conquered city may possibly have distorted his idea of right and justice, and I shall not deliberately bring further disaster on him by revealing his identity.

This man—we will call him Huy-liger because that is as unlike his name as it is mine—was very kind to me on that memorable night when I aroused him from his sleep and in a few words of explanation told him of my plight.

He invited me inside, prepared some food for me and, putting on a dressing gown, came and sat by me while I ate, listening with the greatest interest to the short account of my adventures.

He could speak English fluently, and he interrupted me several times to express his sympathy for the sufferings I had endured.

"O'Brien," he said, after I had concluded my story, "I am going to help you. It may take several days—perhaps as long as two weeks—but eventually we will provide the means to enable you to get to Holland."

I thanked him a thousand times and told him that I didn't know how I could possibly repay him.

"Don't think of that," he replied; "the satisfaction of knowing that I have aided in placing one more victim of the Hun beyond their power to harm will more than repay me for all the risk I shall run in helping you. You'd better turn in now, O'Brien, and in the morning I'll tell you what I plan to do."

As I removed my clothes and noticed that my knees were still swollen to twice their normal size, that my left ankle was black and blue from the wrench I had given it when I jumped from the train and that my ribs showed through my skin, I realized what a lot I had been through. As a matter of fact, I could not have weighed more than one hundred and fifty pounds at

"Corn-Less Day" for Feet, Every Day

Use "Geta-It," the Great Corn Discovery! Makes Corns Peel Right Off!

Look at the illustration below. See the two fingers peeling off a corn as though it were a banana peel! And the man is smiling while he's doing it! All done painlessly, joyfully. The moment "Geta-It" is applied.

"Geta-It," the Only Genuine, Thorough Corn-Footer Ever Discovered. Demand "Geta-It."

It takes but two seconds to apply "Geta-It." The corn pain is eased at once. You can sit at your desk or walk about, dance, think, love and work with absolute ease. You can apply "Geta-It" conveniently almost anywhere where you can take your shoe and stocking off for a moment or two. "Geta-It" dries at once; then put your shoe and stocking on again. There's no further excuse for suffering from corns and corn-pains.

"Geta-It," the guaranteed, money-back corn-remover, the only sure way, costs but a trifle at any drug store. It's by Dr. Lawrence & Co., Chicago, Ill.

"OUTWITTING THE HUN"

By

LIEUTENANT PAT O'BRIEN

Copyright, 1918, by Pat O'Brien

I was in France.

I lost no time in getting into bed and still less in getting to sleep. I don't know what I dreamed of that night, but I had plenty of time to go through the experiences of my whole life, for when I was aroused by a knock on the door and Huylliger entered in response to my invitation to enter, he told me that it was nearly noon! I had slept for almost twelve hours.

I cannot say that the thought did not run through my head that perhaps after all I was living in a fool's paradise, and that when Huylliger appeared it would be with a couple of German soldiers behind him, but I dismissed such misgivings summarily, realizing that I was doing Huylliger an injustice to let such things enter my head even for an instant. I had no right to doubt his sincerity and it would do me no good to entertain such suspicions. If he was going to prove treacherous to me, I was powerless any way to cope with him.

In a few moments my host reappeared with a tray containing my breakfast. I don't suppose I shall ever forget that meal. It consisted of a cup of coffee—real coffee, not the kind I had had at Courtal—several slices of bread, some hot potatoes and a dish of scrambled eggs.

Every mouthful of that meal tasted like angel-food to me, and Huylliger sat on the edge of the bed and watched me enjoying it, at the same time outlining the plans he had made for my escape.

In brief, the scheme was to conceal me in a convent until conditions were ripe for me to make my way to the border. In the meanwhile I was to be dressed in the garb of a priest, and when the time came for me to leave the city I was to pretend that I was a Spanish sailor, because I could speak a little Spanish, which I had picked up on the coast. To attempt to play the part of a Belgian would become increasingly difficult, he pointed out, and would bring inevitable disaster in the event that I was called upon to speak.

Huylliger said I would be given sufficient money to bribe the German guards at the Dutch frontier, and he assured me that everything would work out according to schedule.

"You're not the first case, O'Brien, we have handled successfully," he declared. "Only three weeks ago I heard

LOVE AND LILACS

By MILDRED WHITE.

Copyright, 1918, by Western Newspaper Union.

Homer Brant drew his car up suddenly at sight of the lilac bush. To him the roadway came the sweet haunting odor. Instantly the perfume brought to mind the girl he had so recently and so quickly learned to love.

Homer had stopped there, on his way to an engineering camp higher up. He had intended to remain over night, but with Justice Jordan's coming, his visit had been prolonged.

During the first day they had visited together, upon the hotel veranda, this second found them roaming the wonderful country in his car; at the end of one short enchanted week, Homer caught the girl in his arms, speaking out his love for her. And that had been the end. Like some startled bird she had escaped and flown from his embrace, and when after a troubled night, he awaited her morning appearance, humble in his apology—she had not appeared at all. Instead the hall boy had handed him a note in peculiarly characteristic handwriting.

"Dear friend," it said, "when this reaches you, I shall be up among the hills, fulfilling a mission which has been postponed just one week. Spring time, and lilac time, tempted me to linger. When I meet you again, I hope it may be in the more prosaic and less romantic atmosphere of the city. With best wishes ever—Justice Jordan."

Whereupon, Homer, inwardly fuming at his admired one's practical coolness, bade the inn good-by, and began a searching tour of the hills.

What could be the delayed mission at which she mysteriously hinted and which brought her to this isolated country?

He alighted and made his way to the lilac bush which grew beside the open window of a vacated log cabin; looking inside, he was surprised to see a reclining camp chair in the center of the room. Entering cautiously, he sank into the chair, idly drawing from his side bracket a recent illustrated magazine. Some person evidently made this rude shelter a reading place.

Glancing through the open door across the vista of glorious scenery Homer mentally complimented the reader on his choice of location. Then as he replaced the magazine a pad of writing paper fell from the rack, one glance at the bold and pleasing handwriting brought a quick flush to his face. Surely this and the penmanship of his own hasty note of dismissal were the same. He Justice had found her way to this deserted cabin; then her stopping place must be in a nearby farm house. The

SUMMING UP THE EVIDENCE.

Many Salisbury People Have Been Called As Witnesses.

Week after week has been published the testimony of Salisbury people—kidney sufferers—bachelors victims—people who have endured many forms of kidney, bladder or urinary disorders. These witnesses have used Doan's Kidney Pills. All have given their enthusiastic approval. It's the same everywhere. 50,000 American men and women are publicly recommending Doan's—always in the home papers. Isn't it a wonderful, convincing mass of proof? If you are a sufferer your verdict must be "Try Doan's first."

Here's one more Salisbury case. John H. Connelly, 508 E. Lombard St., says: "When I went to Virginia, I was obliged to drink impure water and I began to suffer from my kidneys. My back also became weak. I used two boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills and they removed all the trouble. Occasional use of Doan's since has prevented a return attack. This medicine cannot be praised too highly."

Mr. Connelly is only one of many Salisbury people who have gratefully endorsed Doan's Kidney Pills. If your back aches—if your kidneys bother you, don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—ask distinctly for DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS, the same that Mr. Connelly had—the remedy backed by home testimony. 60 cents at all stores. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y. "When Your Back is Lame—Remember the Name."

lines: "Across the miles I have traveled to our trying place, and you are not here. Instead, I find the loving note you braved danger to leave. Beloved, let not your courageous spirit falter. Without one look into your eyes, without a touch of your dear hand, I could not go back to the world. Some way I shall manage our meeting. Never in my heart can there be room for other than you. I am—Your Own."

The pad slipped from the man's trembling fingers. So this was the secret of the softly brooding eyes; and love after all these years had but found him to make mockery.

Homer sprang to his feet, as a girl came through the doorway, came and stood a moment, surprise and diffidence in her gaze.

"Justice!" he cried out sharply, then still inwardly raging, pointed to the written pages at his feet. "I read your letter through," he said, "I even forgot about scruples and it has showed me why you ran away from my love. But I want to know," he straightened before her, "I demand to know, why any man dare to ask a woman to meet him in secret, dare bring her into threatened danger!"

Across the girl's somber eyes flashed her transforming smile. "That man, is a German spy," she replied. Brant came suddenly close, fiercely he caught her wrists in his grasp. "And you," he breathed, "you—"

For a time she stood, looking steadily into his face. "Let me go," she said at last, "and I will explain."

When he loosed her hands, she smiled, and going to the camp chair, brought back an open magazine holding it out before him.

Dazedly he read the title of a story, "In Love and War," and beneath it, "new serial, by Justice Jordan."

"You are more privileged than others," she laughed, "for you have read the beginning of a later installment. That is what I came out here to write. The cabin is my study."

"So," he said slowly, "you are a great author, little Justice."

"Not great," the girl replied, "very simple, love and lilacs—that sort of thing."

"And in your own life, you have no use for love?"

She looked from the lilacs nodding through the cabin window, back to the man's tense face. "Six days were too short a time in which to be sure," she murmured, "the country confuses with its enchantment."

"But now?" his eyes burned into hers the question.

Two ounces of fat per day is as much as any person needs.

Each individual boiled potato served as food will require more butter or cream to make it palatable to most people than would be required to season it beautifully if it was served as mashed potato.

Now potatoes mashed and whipped with scarcely any seasoning, just a bit of hot milk and butter, will be more palatable than poorly mashed and not whipped potatoes, with a good deal of cream and butter.

OATMEAL SOUP.
(Official Recipe.)

One cup milk, three cups rice stock or vegetable stock, two cups cold boiled oatmeal, one teaspoon grated onion or one-quarter teaspoon grated nutmeg, one-half teaspoon salt and dash pepper.

Put the milk and rice stock into top of double boiler; add the oatmeal, which has been rubbed through coarse strainer; add the grated onion or nutmeg, salt, pepper and paprika; boil five minutes.

A good way to make this soup is to make extra oatmeal for breakfast; when breakfast is over, add the

THIS milk and cream is from tuberculin-tested cows. The milk is cooled to a very low temperature immediately after milking, and bottled; milk is then stored until delivered in our refrigerator, which is kept just above the freezing point by the improved York expansion cooling system, which has recently been installed. Bottles are washed and sterilized before using, as are also all milk utensils.

The cows are thoroughly examined by a competent veterinary at short intervals. Herd is in charge of an expert in the feeding and care of dairy cattle. All is being done to produce a very high quality milk and cream and to serve the same in a satisfactory manner.

SPORTING BLOOD

By JACK LAWTON.

(Copyright, 1918, by Western Newspaper Union.)

When the girl had climbed to the peak in the cliff, she drew back at the appearance of an old man encoined on the rock which was her favorite resting place.

"I beg your pardon," she said; "I thought no one was here."

The old man smilingly waved his hand. "Well, I'm just no one at all," he replied, "so make yourself comfortable, and don't mind me."

Janey hesitated, but as he returned to his absorbed contemplation of the scenic panorama, she sank down upon a lower rock, and was evidently soon lost in troubled thought. A deep sigh at last escaped her.

"Only the aged should sigh," the old man remarked pleasantly. Janey turned to look into his shrewd eyes beneath their grizzled white brows, and all at once she felt an impulsive desire to confide in the possessor of these same kindly sympathetic eyes.

As though reading her scruples, the old man bent down encouragingly. "Well?" he asked.

The girl laughed. "It's about Billy," she answered, the words seeming to say themselves.

"When a young woman sighs," her odd companion responded, "it usually is about Billy, or Jack or Tom! Has he been called to war?"

Janey shook her head. "Not yet," she said. "Billy is just a little above the age limit. That seems to be his fault; he is always just a little out of everything."

"And this particular thing in which he fails?" the man persisted.

"I am strangely moved to tell you all about it," Janey said slowly, "though I am sure I don't know why."

"Most people are moved to tell me things," he assured her; "sometimes I am fortunate enough to help them; sometimes not. In this instance—"

"Billy and I had decided to marry," Janey said. "Father places an obstacle."

The old man nodded. "My father would like me to marry his own business partner," she said; "a very promising young man."

"But you wouldn't like it," her companion supplemented; "so what is father's obstacle in Billy's case?"

"Oh! It's mean," the girl cried out indignantly, "and it's unfair! Years ago father sold a cumbersome house and barns on the hills to some stranger who agreed to carry the estate along and make payment when he could. Father was glad, then, to have the taxes taken off his hands. But the man who bought the place went away (he was some sort of a sporting man) and he left the house with caretakers, the barns filled with his horses. Then one day the estate came back into father's hands. The sporting man was bankrupt, they said. He had paid nothing on the property, and house and barns were all out of repair. They really had abused things shockingly, so father sued for damages, just enough to put the place in selling order again. But his lawyer could get nothing. The sporting man was clever enough always to arrange his affairs that way, they said. And now—"

Janey threw out her hands despairingly, "this is father's insurmountable obstacle: Billy must make good by collecting those damages. Father knows this is impossible. And Billy—"

A tender smile hovered about the girl's mouth. "Oh, Billy is so confident of everything."

"I like a man who is sure of winning," the old man told her.

Janey laughed. "That is the way Billy was sure about me," she confided. He really is poor, you know, and father is quite rich. Yet Billy came boldly courting, and you see, her tone was wistful. "Billy won me."

The old man nodded. "Yes," he answered. "I see. And what was the name of this unscrupulous man who purchased your father's house to destroy it?"

The girl arose. "It was an Irish name," she replied, "Jerry Sullivan. And perhaps he did not know how badly the place had been used; he was away, you know. But at any rate," she sighed, "no one can collect from Jerry Sullivan; that's his reputation." Her companion chuckled; then with old-time gallantry he turned to assist her down the cliff.

"Now if they'd sent you to him," he said, "they might have had a different story."

"I wonder," said Janey, with a parting handclasp.

From below she waved up to him, then turned to run into her lover's arms. "Just hunted you up," said Billy, "to tell you I'm on the way to Sullivan's office; he's in town."

"Billy," cried the girl, "will you see him today?"

The young man shook his head. Any eyes but Billy's might have been discouraged by the shabby appearance of Jerry Sullivan's office. Surely bankruptcy, even poverty was evidenced here. But when he had stated his case, the old man in the chair before him pushed forward pen and paper. "Write out your claim, young man," he said, "and we will settle the thing right here. And now," he added, when that feat had been accomplished with astounding ease, "now, I want you to take a message for me to that girl you are going to marry."

"Tell her that she met Jerry Sullivan on the cliff today, and Jerry's sporting blood wouldn't let him see the other fellow win."

INJURY DONE BY INJECTIONS

Treatments Are Entirely Without Merit in Controlling Either Insects or Diseases.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Claim is occasionally made, in circular matter issued by financially interested persons and in other ways, of the efficacy in insect and disease control of substances or compounds inserted into holes bored into trees or placed under the bark. Wonderful results have been claimed in some instances from such treatments, and some orchardists and numerous owners of a few yard trees have been induced to have their trees "inoculated."

The purpose of this paragraph is to advise fruit growers and others that such treatments are entirely without merit in controlling insects and diseases, and are often decidedly injurious to the trees treated. The illustration shows the injury to trees resulting from placing under the bark small quantities of a compound containing

A WISE DECISION.

The decision of Senator Crothers of Cecil County not to enter the Democratic Congressional Primaries against Congressman Price is a welcome and pleasing one not only for Congressman Price and his friends, who of course are glad to escape the worry, trouble and expense of a primary fight, but to the entire body of democrats in this county and we believe of the whole district as well.

As pointed out in an editorial in this paper some time back, this is no time to engage in political fights just for the sake of politics, nor do we believe that people can make a party any more a movement, no matter by whom it is tried. This country is engaged in a struggle upon which depends the safety and the liberty of the present and future generations.

look at this year, is whether or not the Congressman seeking a re-election has done his part in helping the nation to make available every ounce of its resources both of men and material.

Congressman Price acts are known, his stand on all the war measures is a matter of record, and it is to his credit both as a representative of this royal and patriotic district, and as a true American citizen himself, that he has always stood firmly behind the President and the entire administration in the various war measures that have come before Congress.

With a record behind him of doing this, there seems to us to be no reason in a primary contest which would have only led to trouble and expense and resulted in no advantage to either the party or the country.

Senator Crothers is to be congratulated that he was able to see things in the right light, and his decision will be welcomed by all.

THE ECONOMY OF VICTORY.

No matter what this war costs the Government and the people of the United States in the way of money, it is going to be much cheaper to win this war than to lose it.

The commercial and financial losses that would follow a German victory are not to be calculated. All that we spent would be lost, indemnities beyond calculation would have to be paid, and along with these losses would come a continuing loss in foreign commerce that would spell disaster.

With these material losses we would lose our national liberty and independence, our power to secure our international rights, our right to live in a world ruled by the dictates of humanity and civilization.

AN AUGUST CONCEPTION.

Samuel Taylor Coleridge, poet and essayist, writing some 75 years ago, said:

"The possible destiny of the United States of America as a Nation of a hundred million of free men, stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, living under the laws of Alfred and speaking the language of Shakespeare and Milton, is an august conception."

The United States is now a Nation of a hundred million and more, stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and reaching out east takes in Hawaii and the Philippines, in the north Alaska, and in the south the Panama Canal. But grander than its physical is its moral greatness. Its fairness and justice, its courage and power, its maintenance of right and freedom cover the world.

The destiny of the United States is a more thrilling in a more

PROCLAMATION

Proposing an Amendment to the Constitution of the State, Providing For Absent Voting.

Whereas, at the January session of the General Assembly of Maryland, held in the year 1918, a Bill was passed, to wit: Chapter 20 of said Acts, proposing an additional section to Article 1 of the Constitution of Maryland, to be known as Section 1A and relating to Absent Voting, and which said Bill is in the words and figures following:

CHAPTER 20
An Act to propose an amendment to Article 1, title, "Election Franchise," of the Constitution of the State of Maryland, by adding a new section thereto, to be known as Section 1A, the same relating to absent voting; and to provide for the submission of said amendment to the qualified voters of this State for adoption or rejection.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, that all the members of each of the two Houses concurring, that the following new Section be and the same is hereby proposed as an Amendment to Article 1, title, "Election Franchise," of the Constitution of the State of Maryland, to be known as Section 1A, the same relating to absent voting, and which said Bill is in the words and figures following:

Section 1. The General Assembly of Maryland shall have power to provide by suitable enactment for voting by qualified voters of the State or of any part thereof, and engaged in the military or naval service of the United States at the time of any election from the ward or election district in which they are entitled to vote, and for the manner in which and the time and place at which such absent voter may vote, and for the canvass and return of their votes.

Section 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That said foregoing Section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, shall be at the next General Election for Members of Congress held in this State submitted to the legal and qualified voters of the State for adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the directions contained in Article XIV of the Constitution of this State, and at the said General Election the vote on the said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be printed the words "For the Constitutional Amendment" and "Against the Constitutional Amendment" as now provided by law, and immediately after said election the result shall be made to the Governor of the vote for and against said proposed amendment as directed by said Fourteenth Article of the Constitution, and further proceedings had in accordance with said Article Fourteen.

Approved March 22, 1918.
Now, therefore, I, Minnison C. Harrington, Governor of the State of Maryland, in pursuance of the direction contained in Section 1 of Article 14 of the Constitution of Maryland do hereby order and direct that this Proclamation, containing a full, true and correct copy of the text of said Chapter 20 of the Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland, Session of 1918, be published in at least two newspapers in each of the counties of the State where so many may be published, and where more than one may be published, then in that newspaper, and in three newspapers published in the City of Baltimore, one of which shall be in the German language, once a week for at least three months next preceding the General Election to be held in the State of Maryland on Tuesday, November 5, 1918, at which election the said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be submitted in form and manner prescribed by the General Assembly, to the legal and qualified voters of the State for their adoption or rejection.

FEW HARMFUL BIRDS

English Sparrows And Some Kinds Of Hawks Should Be Destroyed.

Walter Prichard Eaton, in Harper's Magazine.

The limits of this article do not permit me to discuss at any length the harmful birds. They are relatively few in number, the worst being the goshawk, the Cooper and the sharp shinned hawks (which are the only ones that seriously raid poultry, the others doing more good than harm in destroying field mice, moles, snakes and the like). Bobolinks are harmful to the Southern rice fields, destroying as high as 10 per cent. of the crop. Crows are neither all bad nor all good; they are the most human of birds!

The English sparrow is an undiluted pest because he drives out other and much more desirable birds, and should always be destroyed, either by poison, by traps or by a gun. Knocking down the nest does no good, though taking out the eggs every day helps. The robin and certain other birds sometimes seriously raid small fruit crops, particularly the cherry, but by planting a few trees of a wild variety on the edge of an orchard they can be controlled; and in most cases the good they do outbalances the harm.

The great bulk of our common North American birds are unreservedly our friends, in a very real sense, working for us at least 10 hours a day, busily, without pay, singing at their labors, destroying insect pests, keeping down weeds, grubbing up worms, helping the beneficent forces in Nature in their endless battle with the parasites. Their total economic value in this capacity is far up in the millions of dollars. Their destruction would mean a very grave disturbance of the balance of Nature; and, conversely, their protection by every means in our power is as much a duty as any other form of conservation. Sentiment may be left quite out of the question.

A Legal War Bride

By ELIZABETH FORREST

(Copyright, 1918, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Robert Peters, attorney at law, with a newspaper in one hand, a pen in the other, sat before his office desk, a very picture of perplexity. "Thunder" he finally exploded, dashed the pen onto the desk, and swerved around to his startled stenographer.

"What is the proper thing to write to an engaged girl?"

"It all depends on how well you know her."

"Humph! If I tell you all about it, will you help me with this matter of etiquette?"

"Agreed." And Mary Borden listened.

"Well, Ruth Hampton and I grew up together. She was a good pal and everybody's friend; she appealed to me because she had intellect and good nature. I always have liked girls who can really 'do' something."

"Then after both mother and dad were gone, Ruth and her mother were like sister and mother to me. So when I took up law, it was with Ruth that I studied—and I do believe she could have passed the bar exams when I did, had she been so minded. There was never anything more than sincere friendship between us, so I have had no ties to draw me back to Morton during these busy years here in New York—it has been nearly three." He hesitated, but Mary Borden's twenty years in the business world had molded her sympathetic nature into a character by which harried men were ever inspired to confidence.

"But," he continued, "although I was fast forgetting Ruth, she was vividly brought to mind this morning. While reading my newspaper I chanced on a picture of her, and the announcement of her engagement. The picture doesn't look like the Ruth I used to know, but time, I suppose, does effect changes. Now, Miss Borden, the really funny part of my tale is this: I feel actually angry that Ruth has become engaged, and I've concluded that I'm what you might call, well—jealous! And she thanks, awfully, but I've just decided that I'll not write her at all—she didn't send me a personal announcement."

"But is it reasonable to expect that of her? Do you write to her? Does she know where you are?"

Peters flushed. "Well," he grinned, "you've got me in a corner. I believe it has been some eight or ten months since I last wrote."

"May I see that paper, please?"

"Certainly." Then Miss Borden busied herself some minutes in the reading of the article in question. She started to read it again. At a sudden exclamation from her Robert looked at her inquiringly.

"Where did you say you used to live?"

"Morton, Ky."

"But, look, this notice reads, 'Miss Ruth Hampton of Berkeley, Cal.' so it can't be your Ruth!"

Robert snatched the paper eagerly from her and for a long time studied the cut. "No," he said at length, "there can't possibly be two Ruth Hamptons who look sufficiently alike to be sisters."

"There has been time enough for them to have traveled clear around the world, for all my knowledge of Ruth and her mother; so without a doubt the simple truth is that they have gone to California to live."

He sat a while in troubled silence, and at last tried to fix his attention on some briefs. It was useless. His mind wandered continually; and he asked himself over and over "Why do I care, why do I care?" There could be but one answer!

At noon he lunched absent-mindedly. Before returning he visited a Western Union office and sent a telegram to the postmaster of Morton. Of course the message was an inquiry regarding Ruth. But his conclusions of the morning were confirmed by the answering wire, sent collect: "Ruth Hampton and mother left Morton last October. Whereabouts unknown." And it was now April! After some time spent in gloomy penitence he roused himself.

Robert Peters was not backboneless, and given to mooning. Frequently, to be sure, he thought and wondered about Ruth; but "the world is full of a number of things"—and wise men keep busy. Robert was wise, hence oblivious, and not troubled by sleepless nights.

Clean-minded, red-blooded, energetic, Robert grew daily more alive to his country's needs. So by June he had enlisted, since, so he said, "the law schools are yearly turning out hundreds of young men as brilliant and as capable as I"—further arguments were lengthy, superfluous.

A few days before he was to leave for camp he had his last case, a short case, but rather difficult. There had been trouble getting a lawyer for the defense, so Robert did not know who was to play opposite him, who had the prosecution.

The trial lasted three days. The morning of the second day Miss Ruth Hampton, counsel for the defense, received a fragrant bouquet and a note asking if Mr. Robert Peters might call that evening. Of course, for obvious reasons overlooked in Mr. Peters' haste, he "might not." The morning of the third day history was repeated. That night he called.

As the maid removed his coat a cracking within reminded him of something. When Ruth and her mother entered to greet him they found him seated stiffly, with a dingy, edge-worn newspaper across his knees. Their greetings were cordial, but Peters' embarrassment increased; his tongue was about as active as the limbs of an athlete who has been bed-ridden for some weeks. Mrs. Hampton, being of the same cloth as all tactful mothers, presently withdrew.

"Bob," Ruth demanded, "what on earth is that newspaper that you have been clutching so madly?" He handed it to her silently, the cut and article folded on top.

She glanced it hurriedly through and returned it. If Bob had looked he might have noticed a hope-raising twinkle in her hazel eyes; but being perverse and foolish, he was engaged in that universal occupation resorted to in times of stress; tracing the pattern in the carpet! His fingers closed absently over the proffered paper.

"Well?" from Ruth.

"Er—oh, yes—er—d—doesn't that mean y—y—y?" he finally exploded.

"Me? What, the Ruth Hampton mentioned in that notice? And if I were?"

"Then you are. I knew it! When are you to be married?"

"Married?" she echoed. "Robert, use reason. Do you suppose my fiancé would allow me to run off to New York to dabble in law?"

"I beg your pardon, Ruth. I hate to ask, but is it—er—"

"A broken engagement?" she supplied. "No. Never been engaged in my life. But listen; I'll not tease you any more. The Ruth of Berkeley is my own cousin—my father's twin brother's daughter. You see, that accounts for our extraordinary likeness to each other. This brother ran away when he was eighteen, to the West evidently, but was never heard from; so I never knew I had such a relative until this Ruth's engagement was announced. Being curious, I wrote for information."

"But her name?"

"Father's mother's name was Ruth, and both boys named their only child for her. Hence the coincidence."

"I don't like coincidences. Don't tell me it was one that made you active in this murder case!"

"It wasn't. I passed the bar exams over a year ago; you surely aren't surprised at that! Last October I took an office in Syracuse."

"Ah, that's why—"

"Sh-h-h! And when I read about this case and the difficulty in getting a lawyer to defend the girl I was inclined to do it myself. What decided me was your being in it. I thought it would be rather much of a surprise, you neglectful boy!"

Well, even legally-inclined war brides like to be married in June.

LAKE HAS APPROPRIATE NAME

Body of Water in Eastern Turkestan Resembles a Pendulum in Its Regular Swing.

Lake Lop-nor, the wandering lake of the desert of Tayla-makan, in eastern Turkestan, is the termination of the River Tarkin. Like a pendulum, the lake has swung from the south to the north of the desert, and back again, since the memory of man. The wanderings of the lake are a tradition handed down from father to son for centuries. The natives of the lake shore have always followed the waters.

At present Lop-nor is in the southern part of the desert; a shallow reedy body of water hardly deserving the name of lake. Murky and unpleasant, it furnishes a livelihood to the inhabitants of its banks, the majority of whom are fishermen. In their frail shallow boats they cut through the reeds, fishing and hunting for water fowl along the banks. In some places the reeds are too thick to admit the passage of the boat; in such cases, however, it is possible to walk over the water on rafts of dried and rotting stems. The chief native delicacy is the eggs of the reed-birds.

Lake Lop-nor is one of the hottest places on the map in the summer and the coldest in the winter. During the winter months the lake is entirely frozen over, the temperature diving to 20 degrees below zero. In the summer the combination of a temperature of 106 degrees and the innumerable flies and mosquitoes which swarm on the banks make Lop-nor anything but a summer resort.

The explanation of the lake's wanderings lies in the fact that Taria carries every year quantities of silt to the lake bed, which slowly rises. In time, a hundred years or so, the river must seek a new outlet, and the pendulum swings to the north or south of the desert, as the case may be.

A Hard Loser.

"Ignorance, sheer ignorance," said a government official, discussing an attack by a war expert.

"This armchair critic," he went on, "is as ignorant as the lady who got up at the S. P. C. A. meeting and said: 'Can't something be done, dear friends—oh, can't something be done—to prevent horses from being scratched? The horse is man's noblest friend, and yet we read about its being scratched almost every day in the papers. The process must be very painful.'"

"Scratching a horse! Oh, dear friends, I'm sure it is a cruel and painful thing to do, for my husband attended the races last Saturday, and all Saturday night in his sleep he groaned and moaned and went on awfully about a horse that had been scratched. If you could have heard him, dear friends! His grief would have melted a heart of stone."

SALISBURY'S GREAT ATTRACTION Come To The FAIR AUGUST 20, 21, 22, 23, 1918

Thousands are coming, as they have done heretofore, to witness the Greatest Fair on the Eastern Shore, and to meet again old friends and acquaintances, and pass a pleasant day in the Metropolis of the Peninsula. In order to accommodate all who expect to come, the fair management has arranged the days as follows:

TUESDAY—Believing that our children should be given everything that we can to make them have a happy and pleasant time in the days when they are free from care and responsibilities, the Association has this year, as the past several years, decided to make Tuesday, the first day of the Fair, "Children's Day." On this day all children twelve years old and under will be admitted to the grounds free. We hope that the parents will take advantage of this and bring their children to be our guests on that day. Some attraction of special interest to the children will be arranged for on that day.

WEDNESDAY—In view of the fact that all our exhibits in farm and live stock will be in place and the premiums awarded, Wednesday has been designated as "Farmer's Day." We hope that the farmers throughout this section will turn-out and make it one of the biggest days of the Fair.

THURSDAY—This day will be known as "The Big Day." Everybody will be here, and if there is anyone that you want to see in this section of the world, come to the Fair Grounds on Thursday and you will find them there.

FRIDAY—In addition to the crowds from other sections, this is the day that Salisburians love to turn out and see and enjoy the wonders and amusements on the Fair Grounds. Practically everyone in Salisbury will attend the Fair sometime during the day.

is one filled with sensational aerial novelties in which incredible feats of strength and endurance are performed by the three wonderful artists who compose this company of THREE ALEX. These artists are expert in their particular line of work, and those who are fortunate enough to see them perform will be rewarded by many thrills as they watch the skilled maneuvers executed high in air.

WONDERFUL CYCLE TRICKS

Even in this day of almost universal automobile ownership, there are many of us who are not so old but that we can recall the pleasures of a few years ago that we had coasting down the hill or passing through some woodland path upon a modest bicycle; but in those days we little dreamed of the possibilities that exist in this little machine. The amazing control, the graceful and pleasing gyrations seen when a true artist of the wheel has control is simply surprising. We have secured as one of our free attractions McDONALD'S three scientific cyclists, who are known far and wide for their speed and accuracy in control of their peculiarly constructed unicycles and bicycles, fixed with wheels both high and low. You may have seen bicycle tricks by the score but this, we venture to say, will prove not only different from all others but better, more interesting and more entertaining.

The Great Midway

When this Fair first started, the management found itself handicapped because of the fact that a suitable midway was hard to obtain. After trying various methods of raising the standard of our midway, we tried a scheme of placing it in the hands of men who made a business out of this form of entertainment. We found this to be a decided improvement over our old method of running a midway. Again this year the midway has been placed in the hands of a well known reputable amusement company of New York City, who guarantees to give us a large selection of clean wholesome shows and interesting animal and other exhibits. We believe that those who attend the Fair this year will find that our midway will be a very attractive place where one can find almost any form of amusement that appeals to them.

Free Attractions

AMERICA'S SENSATION

In addition to the shows, exhibits and other attractions on the midway, the management has secured a number of attractions which will be exhibited free to all on the grounds. The first of these will be one that is booked for the purpose of creating more talk than any similar act of its kind in America today. The act

THE FLYING DUTCHMAN

Everybody loves a laugh. No moment is too serious but what a good comedy will ease and soften. We have secured LEDEGAR, a famous comedian, who will appear in his great comedy success, "The Flying Dutchman." Among his many, comical stunts there will be scattered through many acts truly difficult to perform, such as tight rope walking, dancing, sensational single and double somersaults. LEDEGAR is known as "a man that walks in the air." His production is hard to beat and you cannot watch him and keep your face straight if you have within you the smallest grain of humor. He is not only "one in many," but he will be found to be also "many in one."

In addition to all the acts that have been enumerated above, the Fair will have many things to amuse and entertain both young and old; and those who have been our patrons in the past know what the GREAT SALISBURY FAIR produces. This year will not be an exception.

THRILLING RACES

The list of entries in the various races will no doubt be the largest in the history of the Great Salisbury Fair, and there are many very fast horses in the bunch that will smash some records on the Peninsula.

MOTORCYCLE RACES

This is the only Fair on the Eastern Shore where you can witness professional motorcyclists contesting in the races. These will be worth coming miles to see.

In addition to all these there will be large exhibits of Farm Products, Live Stock, Machinery, Automobiles, Vehicles, Fancy Work, Canned Goods, and hundreds of other things too numerous to mention, which will claim your attention, and admiration.

Don't Forget The Dates

AUGUST 20, 21, 22, 23, 1918

And come to see the GREATEST FAIR to be held this year on the Eastern Shore

Great Lecture At The Tent Wednesday Night

"When man dies he is as unconscious until the great resurrection day as if he were sound asleep," declared Evangelist Andross in his discourse at the tent Wednesday evening on the subject "Body, Soul, and Spirit, or Are Dead People Alive?" The speaker said in brief:

"The question of the 'great beyond' or what there is on the other side of death, is one which has been asked by mankind universally and has engaged the attention of the best thinkers of all ages. Job asked the question thus, 'If a man die, shall he live again?'"

"Death has entered the human family as an intruder. It had no part in God's original plan for man, and had man never sinned death would still be unknown. God warned man that if he sinned he would die, but man, in order to deceive man into sin, said, 'Ye shall not surely die.' Man yielded to the tempter's snare and sinned, and true to God's warning, death entered as the wages of sin. Every funeral is a reminder that God told the truth when he warned man, 'thou shalt surely die.' But man, whom Christ said was a liar from the beginning, in order to make it appear that he told the truth when he said 'Ye shall not surely die,' has been deceiving a large portion of the human race including those who believe that what appears to be death is in reality not death, but actually the gateway to life; and that death but a soul from the encumbrance of the body. So firmly planted has the idea that man is immortal, that he cannot die—that he even taught in modern orthodox churches. We hear great deal about the 'never dying soul'—our immortal soul, etc. But when we turn to the scriptures we read 'The King of kings, and Lord of lords; who only hath immortality.' 1 Tim. 6: 15-16. Thus as God only has immortality, man is not immortal. Indeed, the scriptures repeatedly state that man is mortal—the opposite of immortal. Note the following expressions: 'Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body.' Rom. 6: 12. 'Shall mortal man be more just than God?' Job. 4: 17. '... shall also quicken your mortal bodies.' Rom. 8: 11. 'This mortal must put on immortality.' 1 Cor. 15: 53. 'Oh Lord, thou art our God, let not mortal man prevail against thee.' 2 Chron. 14: 11.

"In Romans 2: 6-7 we learn that we are to 'seek for immortality.' Those who do seek for this wonderful gift will be given eternal life. Rom. 8: 23. It will be given to the righteous.

"God tells us just how he made man in the first place. 'And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul.' From this we find that the union of the body of dust and the breath of life formed a living soul. Now what is the spirit? Job tells us 'All the while my breath is in me, and the spirit of God is in my nostrils.' Job. 27: 3. This breath of life or spirit is possessed by animals as well as by man: 'And they (the animals) went in unto Noah into the ark, two and two of all flesh, wherein is the breath of life.' (Gen. 7: 15). We have already found from Genesis 2: 7 that the union of this 'breath of life' or spirit and the physical body of dust together formed a living soul. But all creatures are said to be living souls. 'And every living soul died in the sea.' Rev. 18: 6. God told Adam to 'have dominion over every living thing that moveth upon the earth.' Gen. 1: 28. The Hebrew word here translated 'living soul.'

Man's death is just the reverse of his creation. 'Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it.' Eccl. 12: 7. No where are we told that the soul goes to heaven at death. Remember it was the union of the body and spirit that formed the soul (Gen. 2: 7); and hence when God takes the spirit of life away from the body of dust, the soul simply dies.

"The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Eze. 18: 4. 'And they smote all the souls that were therein with the edge of the sword, utterly destroying them: there was not any left to breathe.' (Joshua 11: 11.) Notice that the 'spirit' returns to God who gave it. Hence it is not the person who goes to God at death (else the wicked would go to heaven at death.) It is the same breath of life which came from God that goes back to Him at death. Now we were not in heaven with God before our life began on this earth, and so it is not a conscious being that returns.

That man is 'asleep' or unconscious from the day of his death to the great resurrection day when Christ comes the second time, the following texts are ample evidence: 'For the living know that they shall die; but the dead know not anything, neither have they any more a reward; for the memory of them is forgotten. Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished; neither have they any more a portion for ever in any thing that is done under the sun. Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest.' Eccl. 9: 5-6-10. 'Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish.' Ps. 146: 3-4. 'The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence.' Ps. 115: 17. ## A BIGGER BALTIMORE

City Wins On Annexation—Court Of Appeals Unanimous.

The Court of Appeals Wednesday decided the annexation case in favor of the city. This practically ends the fight of five years for extension of Baltimore's limits.

It is not known whether the anti-annexationists will attempt to carry the case into the Federal courts, but the general opinion is that an attempt would not get very far. Lawyers think that such a flat decision as was given Wednesday, coming from the entire membership of the appellate bench settles the matter.

COURT UNANIMOUS. Apparently, the anti-annexationists were very greatly surprised by the unanimity of the court. They had been very hopeful that the decisions of Judges McLean and Duncan, in the Circuit Court for Baltimore county, and of Judges Moss, in the Circuit Court for Anne Arundel county, all of which had been adverse to the city, would be sustained by the Court of Appeals.

A good many of them seemed to think it likely that the Court of Appeals would divide evenly, which would have left the decisions of the lower courts as the law. And all of the country men were confident that, at the least, they would have several of the members of the higher court on their side. It has been said that they believed they would have a better chance to get a hearing in the Federal courts, if there were strong dissenting opinions to a decision of the Court of Appeals in favor of the city.

OPERATIVE JANUARY 1. The Annexation act was effective as of June 1. However, the extension of the functions of the municipal government over the new area will not take place until January 1, 1919. Upon that date, too, the taxes of the property owners in the territory will be payable to the city. Plans already have been made by the municipal authorities to have all of the city machinery ready for extension into the Annex on January 1. This work includes preparation for registration of the voters in the annex, preliminary to their participation in the Mayoralty election next spring.

The territory added to the city is 51 square miles in area. The area of the old city is 30.10 square miles. The population of the annex has been estimated at from 70,000 to more than 100,000. Owing to the rapid development of war industries in the belt surrounding the city, it is likely that at this time the latter figure is nearer right. In fact, the population now may be considerably more than 100,000. The old city's population now is about 600,000. The next census probably will show Baltimore as having a population of at least 700,000 souls, and may show around 800,000.

THE NEW BOUNDARIES. Baltimore's boundaries now are as follows: From 1,000 feet east of Hawkins' Point, on the south shore of the Patuxent river, north in a straight line to Overlea; from Overlea, west in a straight line, to the intersection of Slade avenue and Park Heights avenue; from that point, south in a straight line to the Frederick road; from there in a straight line south-east to the intersection of the Annapolis road and the Brooklyn-Pumphrey road; and from there in a line which curves around to the south and ends at the starting place, near Hawkins' Point. This area includes Govans, Roland Park, Mt. Washington, Arlington, Forest Park, Howard Park, Windsor Hills, Ten Hills, Irvington, Westport and Brooklyn.

TO ALL WOMEN WHO ARE ILL

This Woman Recommends Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—Her Personal Experience.

McLean, Neb.—"I want to recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to all women who suffer from any functional disturbance, as it has done me more good than all the doctor's medicine. Since taking it I have a fine healthy baby girl and have gained in health and strength. My husband and I both praise your medicine to all suffering women."—Mrs. JOHN KOPPELMANN, R. No. 1, McLean, Nebraska.

This famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, has been restoring women of America to health for more than forty years and it will well pay any woman who suffers from displacements, inflammation, ulceration, irregularities, backache, headaches, nervousness or "the blues" to give this successful remedy a trial.

Unnecessary

In one of our larger towns, a woman recently called up at least a dozen stores and markets, to find out if they had any new vegetable, saying she was just looking for "something different." This, of course, helps to congest the service.

In ordinary times we encourage a free use of the wires for social, business and domestic purposes. But these are not ordinary times. War time conditions make us ask you to please cut down the length of social talks and to eliminate unnecessary calls.

"See 'Gots-It' Peel Off This Corn."

Leaves The Toe as Smooth as the Palm of Your Hand.

The corn never grew that "Gots-It" will not get it. It never irritates the flesh, never makes your toe sore. Just two drops of "Gots-It" and presto! the corn-pain vanishes. Shortly you can peel the corn right off with your finger and there you are—pale and happy, with the toe as smooth and corn-free as your palm. "Gots-It" is the only safe way in the world to treat a corn or callus. It's the sure way—the way that never fails. It is tried and true—used by millions every year. It always works. "Gots-It" makes cutting and digging at a corn and fusing with bandages, salves or anything else entirely unnecessary. "Gots-It" is the guaranteed, money-back corn-remover, the only safe way, costs but a trifle at any drug store. Sold by E. Lawrence & Co., Chicago, Ill.

and in that way I managed to keep body and soul together.

It was quite apparent to me, however, that I was worse off in the city than I had been in the fields, and I decided to get out of that house just as soon as I knew definitely that Huytger had made up his mind to do nothing further for me.

When I was not at the keyhole of the door I spent most of my day on the top floor in a room which looked out on the street. By keeping well away from the window I could see much of what was going on without being seen myself. In my restlessness, I used to walk back and forth in that room and I kept it up so constantly that I believe I must have worn a path in the floor. It was nine steps from the wall to the other, and as I had little else to amuse me I figured out one day after I had been pacing up and down for several hours just how much distance I would have covered on my way to Holland if my footsteps had been taken in that direction instead of just up and down that old room. I was very much surprised to find that in three hours I crossed the room no less than 5,000 times and the distance covered was between nine and ten miles. It was not very gratifying to realize that after walking all that distance I wasn't a step nearer my goal than when I started, but I had to do something while waiting for Huytger to help me, and pacing up and down was a natural outlet for my restlessness.

While looking out of the top floor window one day, I noticed a cat on a window ledge of the house across the street. I had a nice piece of a broken mirror which I used to amuse myself for an hour at a time shining it in the cat's eyes across the street. At first the animal was annoyed by the reflection and would move away, only to come back a few moments later. By and by, however, it seemed to get used to the glare and wouldn't budge no matter how strong the sunlight was. Playing with the cat in this way got me into the habit of watching her food remnants, which, in America, are considered garbage and destroyed. In Belgium they were using this "garbage" to make their bread out of, and while the idea may sound revolting to us, the fact is that the Germans have brought these things down to such a science that the bread they make this way is really very good to eat. I know I would have been like cake to me when I was in need of food; indeed I would have eaten the "garbage" direct, let alone the bread.

Although, as I have said, I suffered greatly from hunger while occupying this house, there were one or two things I observed through the keyhole or from the windows which made me laugh, and some of the incidents that occurred during my voluntary imprisonment were really funny.

From the keyhole I could see, for instance, a shop window on the other side of the street, several houses down the block. All day long German soldiers would be passing in front of the house and I noticed that practically every one of them would stop in front of this store window and look in. Occasionally a soldier on duty bent over and peered into the window, but I think nine out of ten of them were sufficiently interested to spend at least a minute, and some of them three or four minutes gazing at whatever was being exhibited in that window, although I noticed that it failed to attract the Belgians.

I have a considerable streak of curiosity in me, and I couldn't help wondering what it could be in that window which almost without exception seemed to interest German soldiers but failed to hold the Belgians, and after conjuring my brains for a while on the problem I came to the conclusion that the shop must have been a book-shop and the window contained German magazines, which, naturally enough, would be of the greatest interest to the Germans but of none to the Belgians.

At any rate I resolved that as soon as night came I would go out and investigate the window. When I got the answer I laughed so loud that I was afraid for the moment I must have attracted the attention of the neighbors, but I couldn't help it. The window was filled with huge quantities of sausage! The store was a butcher shop and one of the principal things they sold apparently was sausage. The display they made, although it consisted merely of sausages piled in the window, certainly had plenty of "pulling" power. It "pulled" nine Germans out of ten out of their course and indirectly "pulled" me right across the street! The idea of those Germans being so interested in that window display as to stand in front of the window for two, three or four minutes at a time, however, certainly seemed funny to me, and when I got back to the house I sat at the keyhole again and found just as much interest as before in watching the Germans stop in their tracks when they reached the window, even though I was now aware that the attraction was.

One of my chief occupations during these days was catching flies. I would catch a fly, put him in a spider's web (there were plenty of them in the old house), and sit down for the spider to come down and get him. But always I pictured myself in the same predicament and rescued the fly just as the spider was about to grab him. Several times when things were dull I was tempted to see the tragedy through, but perhaps the same Providence that guided me safely through all perils was guarding, too, the destiny of those flies, for I always weakened and the flies never did suffer from my lust for amusement.

The house was well supplied with books—in fact, one of the choicest libraries I think I ever saw—but they were all written either in Flemish or French. I could read no Flemish and very little French. I might have made a little headway with the latter, but the books all seemed too deep for me and I gave it up. There was one thing though that I did read and reread from beginning to end; that was a New York Herald which must have arrived just about the time war was declared. Several things in this interested me, and particularly the baseball scores, which I studied with a much care as a real fan possibly could an up-to-date score. I couldn't refrain from laughing when I came to an account of Zimmerman (of the Cubs) being benched for some spit with the umpire, and it afforded me just as much interest three years after it had happened—perhaps more—than some current item of world-wide interest had at that time.

I rummaged the house many times from cellar to garret in my search for something to eat, but the harvest of three years of war had made any success along that line impossible. I was like the man out in the ocean in a boat and thirsty with water everywhere but not a drop to drink.

I was tempted while in the city to go to church on Sunday, but my better judgment told me it would be a useless risk. Of course, someone would surely say something to me and I didn't know how many Germans would there or what might happen, so I gave up that idea.

During all the time I was concealed in this house I saw but one automobile and that was a German staff officer's. That same afternoon I had one of the frights of my young life.

I had been gazing out of the keyhole as usual when I heard coming down the street the measured tread of German soldiers. It didn't sound like very many, but there was no doubt in my mind that German soldiers were marching down the street. I went upstairs and peeked through the window and sure enough a squad of German infantry was coming down the street accompanied by a military motor truck. I hadn't the slightest idea that they were coming after me, but still the possibility of the situation gave me more or less alarm, and I considered how I could make my escape if by chance I was the man they were after. The idea of hiding in the wine cellar appealed to me as the most practical; there must have been

His "Good Time"

By EVELYN BELL

Copyright, 1916, Western Newspaper Union.

Always there was present with Hector Wyant a memory of the saddest day in his life. It had found him in the dock of a city police court. Strong drink held him in its ruthless chains. Unkempt, bleary-eyed, with trembling limbs he faced the stern judge about to deliver sentence.

Beside Judge John Webster sat his daughter, Alma. She had come to the court room because her father was to see her to a train. A sense of shame, of remorse, was revealed in the face of the delinquent as he lifted his eyes and rested them on the fair face of the young girl. Perhaps there was a pleading, penitent expression in his glance.

At all events, just as her father took up his pen to write upon the court sheet the fine he had decided to impose, his daughter whispered some words in his ear. The judge bestowed a searching look upon the prisoner.

"Young man," he said, "I give you the opportunity of freedom will you sign a pledge to mend your way—and keep it?"

A choking sensation prevented Wyant from replying. He simply nodded assent, flashed a grateful glance at the young lady to whom he rightly attributed this unexpected act of mercy, and passed before the court clerk. The latter filled out a blank With blurred comprehension Wyant realized that he had signed a pledge for five years from that day, which he never forgot was May the fifteenth.

Wyant fought his battle with the run demon in a wretched attic room. A month later he succeeded in gaining a position as a draftsman. The test of a first year passed unscathed. In constant work he occupied his mind. "Only three years more," he soliloquized grimly, when twenty-four months had passed away, and he would allow his mind to wander among the dangerous reefs of anticipation of something to look forward to. Shut up within himself, he planned a final "good time."

"OR for a full month's vacation, eh?" halled a fellow worker, five years to a day from the date of the pledge. "Well, you've earned it."

SUMMING UP THE EVIDENCE.

Many Salisbury People Have Been Called As Witnesses.

Week after week has been published the testimony of Salisbury people—kidney sufferers—backache victims—people who have endured many forms of kidney, bladder or urinary disorders. These witnesses have used Doan's Kidney Pills. All have given their enthusiastic approval. It's the same everywhere. 50,000 American men and women are publicly recommending Doan's—always in the home papers. Isn't it a wonderful, convincing mass of proof? If you are a sufferer your verdict must be "Try Doan's first."

Here's one more Salisbury case. John H. Connelly, 503 E. Isabella St., says: "When I went to Virginia, I was obliged to drink impure water and I began to suffer from my kidneys. My back also became weak. I used two boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills and they removed all the trouble. Occasional use of Doan's since has prevented a return attack. This medicine cannot be praised too highly."

Mr. Connelly is only one of many Salisbury people who have gratefully endorsed Doan's Kidney Pills. If your back aches—if your kidneys bother you, don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—ask distinctly for DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS, the same that Mr. Connelly had—the remedy backed by home testimony. 60 cents at all stores. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y. "When Your Back is Lame—Remember the Name."

Wyant placed the tired child on his shoulder, reached Wyndham's Corners, which the boy had incoherently alluded to, and through inquiry located a squalid building and was directed to the rooms occupied by a Mrs. Byrne.

With a cry of joy the mother, an invalid, stretched out her arms as the urchin she had been mourning over was deposited on the floor of the room. "I told you little Jamie would be found," Mrs. Byrne, spoke a sweet, solacing voice, and Wyant noticed a neatly dressed young lady. "We are grateful to you for restoring the little wanderer," she addressed him, and a struggling memory assailed his mind as he caught a clear sight of her face.

He told how he had come across little Jamie. It led to some casual conversation, which disclosed the fact that the young lady was a settlement worker and was waiting to meet the landlord of the indigent widow to adjust the room rent.

Wyant went to his hotel, his plans somehow knocked away. His brief experience among the lowly, perhaps the meeting with the young lady, gave him new food for thought. He contrasted her unselfish, sacrificing impulse with his own aimless ones. Her "good time" was in lifting up the weak and fallen. The next day found him at the home of Mrs. Byrne. He contributed out of his "good-time" fund in half a dozen deserving cases and went home that night with a peaceful, satisfied heart. It was a discovery that fairly stunned him, that which he made a day later—for the first time he learned the name of the settlement worker. It was Alma Webster.

In a flash the daughter of Judge Webster, that court room scene, was vividly pictured. Now he knew why he had been so strangely stirred at meeting this gentle almoner for the poor.

Wyant devoted a whole week to dispensing his "good-time" money where it could be most worthily bestowed. One day he found Miss Webster alone at the Byrne home.

"I would like to tell you a story," said Wyant, and he began with the day of the pledge, and recited all, even to his last temptation.

"You have saved me twice," he spoke earnestly. "You have shown me my duty—to help others as you have helped me. I don't know what will come of it, but I long to devote all my thoughts to such noble work."

What could come of it, but a closer friendship with this woman among women? What did come of it was a love that crowned two lives with perfection and usefulness.

Bumstead's Worm Syrup

A safe and sure Remedy for Worms. Stood the test for 50 years. IT NEVER FAILS. To children it is as sweet as honey. PLEASANT TO TAKE. NO SICKNESS, NO PAINFUL BRUISES. One bottle has killed 125 worms. All drug stores and dealers, or by mail—See a bottle. C. A. VOORHEES, M. D., Phila., Pa.

Two ounces of fat per day is as much as any person needs.

Each individual boiled potato served as such will require more butter or sauce to make it palatable to most people than would be required to season it beautifully if it was served as mashed potato.

New potatoes mashed and whipped with scarcely any seasoning. Just a bit of hot milk and butter, will be more palatable than poorly mashed and not whipped potatoes, with a good deal of cream and butter.

If you are a storekeeper, encourage the use of substitutes for beef, pork and wheat. Get your customers to buy goods that will release other foods for shipment overseas. Do not overstock; do not overcharge; reduce your overhead. You are a partner with the Maryland Food Administration.

OATMEAL SOUP.

(Official Recipe.)

One cup milk, three cups rice stock or vegetable stock, two cups cold boiled oatmeal, one teaspoon grated onion or one-quarter teaspoon grated nutmeg, one-half teaspoon salt and dash pepper.

Put the milk and rice stock into top of double boiler; add the oatmeal, which has been soaked through cover.

Get the Rich Pure Product

Milk in bulk at 9 1/2 cents. Cream for 60 cents per quart

THIS milk and cream is from tuberculin-tested cows. The milk is cooled to a very low temperature immediately after milking, and bottled; milk is then stored until delivered in our refrigerator, which is kept just above the freezing point by the improved York expansion cooling system, which has recently been installed. Bottles are washed and sterilized before using, as are also all milk utensils.

The cows are thoroughly examined by a competent veterinary at short intervals. Herd is in charge of an expert in the feeding and care of dairy cattle. All is being done to produce a very high quality milk and cream and to serve the same in a satisfactory manner.

Come at any time and see for yourself how the milk is produced, and handled in a more sanitary manner.

THE PRODIGAL SON

By AUGUSTUS G. SHERWIN.

(Copyright, 1918, by Western Newspaper Union)

He was a man of whims and impulse apparently, for he was almost childishly engrossed in viewing a pretty picture, of which a bright, attractive-looking girl was the center. She was just inside the fence of a clover field and was daintily picking the lucious red tops. Then she would go to the separating barbed wire fence, reach through and pet, converse with and feed a white-speckled calf, plump, friendly and spotless of grime or brier.

"I've an idea—the fattest calf" abruptly chuckled the onlooker. "Almost as pretty as the girl," and he approached the fence near which Hilda Strong stood.

"Part of the big farm a bit back where they're selling out?" he asked. The girl, quite startled, flushed and fluttered and gave a confused answer. "I'll take that calf if the figure is right," resumed the stranger.

"But Whitley is not for sale," announced Hilda. "She does not belong to the farm. Mr. Warren gave her to me when she was the fattest thing and I have raised her."

"You wouldn't sell her, then?" "Oh, no! Never! That is—unless I had to. And maybe that may come," said Hilda, a mournful shadow crossing her pretty face. "Mr. Warren is breaking up and I must look for a new home. I am an orphan and have only a few distant relatives."

Her artless charm charmed Bart Miller and her simple ways aroused his sympathy and interest.

"Helgho!" he uttered. "We're pretty near of a kind. I've been an orphan myself for ten years—that is, I ran away from home and haven't seen father or mother since."

"Oh, dear! how could you stay away from them?" chided Hilda.

"Well, I got going careless and rough and bad. Then in trouble, and finally I settled down to life among the hardest crowd a ranch ever knew. It was cards, drink and fighting most of the time."

Hilda had shrunk a little at the confession. "You don't look very careless, and rough, and bad," she said. He laughed quite boisterously at her innocence.

"I'm not—now. That's why I'm going back home."

"Oh, are you? Are you?" cried Hilda, sprightly. "How glad your folks will be to see you!"

"Father is dead," said Bart. "But mother is living, and I've sort of spied out the land before I ventured to let her know I was around. As I said, I was a reckless one until a year ago. I had gone to prospecting. Bad as ever, I trained with a hard crowd. One day I took a drop too much, and a tumble. I went into a pit—it must have been over fifty feet. How I escaped being killed I couldn't reckon out. When I landed it was on a soft bed of sand—on my knees."

He spoke the last words solemnly. A strange, spiritual expression came into his eyes and illumined his face, until Hilda was fascinated in an intense, hypnotic way.

"Yes, on my knees," repeated Bart. "There I was—saved by the Almighty. I was, as I had been at my mother's side way back in childhood. All my bad life flashed upon me. The word of 'Now I lay me down to sleep' drifted dreamily through my mind. I couldn't stir for over an hour. All the time some new spirit seemed to come over me. Young lady, I crawled out of that pit weak and broken—a new man."

"Oh, how glad your dear old mother will be when you tell her all this!" cried Hilda.

"With good behavior came good luck," went on Bart tersely. "I struck a rich mine. I saved. Instead of squandering, I'm going home a pretty rich man, and my money will do some good, for I found my mother poor and neglected. I'm still queer in my notions, young lady. I know what mother will say when she sees me coming back."

"What?" urged Hilda breathlessly, as absorbed as though listening to some entrancing fairy story.

"Well, mother is biblical, and it would be just like her to say, in her gentle, kindly, forgiving way: 'Prodigal son, you are welcome, and for you shall be killed the fattest calf.' But, you see, poor old soul; she has no fattest calf. And your Whitley struck my fancy. And I thought I'd buy her, lead her to the old home—it's only ten miles across the country—and say, 'Mother, I've brought the fattest calf, and a bag of gold, and my worthless self, all at once back home.'"

"Oh, she won't think you worthless! And what a grand man you have been to stop—stop being rough and careless, and all that, and thinking so much of your dear old mother! And what a blessing you will be to her, and I'm so glad I met you, for you can take Whitley, and you're welcome to her, and it's all like some beautiful story," and, overcome by her emotions, Hilda broke down in tears.

It was with a pretty ribbon tied around her neck that Whitley was led away from her devoted young mistress.

Hilda had urged him to tell her the end of the charming story he, she, the old mother and Whitley were setting out. "Mother says she must see you," reported Bart two days later. "Hilda, we haven't known each other very long, but long enough for me to know that I love you, and want you to help me make mother happy."

Inquiries Will be Answered Promptly

One of the advantages which customers who shop by mail appreciate most is a prompt answer to their inquiries.

Baltimore's Best Store, through its Mail Shopping Service, aims to give its out-of-town customers the same courteous and prompt attention which we extend to those who make their purchases in person.

So, if you desire any information as to the descriptions and prices of any merchandise in our stocks, write us, and we will answer your inquiry promptly.

If samples of materials are desired, state the fabric, color, and the price you may wish to pay—in that way, we can send you those nearest to your description. If you ask for suggestions as to materials and colors most in favor, we will gladly give you the information.

Altogether, you will find Baltimore's Best Store the logical place at which to do your shopping by mail—or in person.

Salads counteract the tendency to anemia, scurvy, gout and rheumatism. If you are threatened with any of these ailments, make the grocer your druggist.

On a wheatless day no grain of wheat should be used. Not more than seven of these days should be observed in any one week.

JELLIED FISH.

(Official Recipes.)

Mix one and one-half cupfuls of cooked fish with two tablespoonfuls chopped capers. Chopped celery and hard-boiled eggs may be added. Soak one tablespoonful gelatine in two tablespoonfuls cold water. When the gelatine is dissolved, mix it with one cupful boiling water. Add two tablespoonfuls lemon juice and seasoning of salt and pepper. Stir in the fish mixture, pour in a chilled mold, and set in a cool place to harden. Cut in slices, and serve on lettuce leaves with mayonnaise dressing. The gelatine and the fish may be arranged in layers if the housekeeper has time to spend in preparing the dish.

CORN COMES INTO ITS OWN.

Corn, rightly used, will help materially to win the war; moreover, it is a real American product, and it ought to be our national dish. Not so many years ago corn and cornmeal formed the basis of only a few foods and dishes. Now corn is a breakfast cereal, the basis of nearly 100 sorts of bread and muffins; it's a sugar, a syrup, a salad oil, a cooking oil, a dessert material and even a candy, and being such a distinctly American food it should rank with the Thanksgiving turkey and ice cream in our affections.

Among our French, Belgian and Italian allies salads are rightly regarded as a necessity. She is a poor housewife who looks upon them as a luxury.

THE COMING FAIR.

On Tuesday next, the Great Salisbury Fair will open its gate for its annual exhibits, its racing and its shows.

An Agricultural fair has for its object the promotion of the agricultural interest, by creating an interest in better stock, and improved methods of raising crops. It is the central meeting place where the stock and products of breeders and farmers come into open competition and all can see and learn what others are doing and have done.

In addition to its educational value, a Fair provides amusement and entertainment for its thousands of patrons in the form of horse and other forms of racing, in its free attractions, its shows and its midways, to say nothing of the opportunity gives many of seeing friends, relatives and acquaintances, who live in a distant neighborhood where opportunities for social relations are few and far between.

The Great Salisbury Fair has from its first season been a success and each year thousands attend its annual fair. It has brought to the city of Salisbury more visitors than any other agency and this fact should not be overlooked by our business men who are interested in anything that tends to advertise and bring visitors to the city.

A Fair ought to be a community matter and not one of interest chiefly to its stockholders, and the movement made by the management to convert the one here from a private owned corporation, whose earnings belong to the stockholders to one owned by the community at large, with all earnings going to the upkeep and improvement of the Fair is one that should receive the whole-hearted support of our business men, of our truckers, farmers and stock-raisers. Under the proposed plan the stockholders would not receive any dividends from their stock out of the earnings of the Company, but all of this would be available for improvements and such things as would tend to make the Fair bigger and better. The stockholders, however, would be well taken care of in the form of special concessions along the lines of free tickets etc.

If the plan goes through the Fair here ought to increase several times in importance and in size. The more money it has to spend the higher premiums it could pay and thus get the best exhibits of agricultural products and pure blooded stock. Another thing for the business men to consider is that the larger it grows the more people it will draw to our city, and the better it grows the more value it will be as an advertising medium for Salisbury.

This year our citizens should regard the Fair of next week as a personal matter in which everyone is interested and each one should do his or her full part to make it a success and to leave on the thousands of visitors a pleasant impression of the Fair and the hospitality and enterprise of the city of Salisbury. Don't forget that the greater its success the greater its value to the community. By this time next year let us hope that it will be mutualized into a community fair starting out on a long lease of life in which it is to prove an agent of great value to our community both city and rural.

Belief That Seems Commonly Accepted is Incorrect, According to Writer in Boy Scouts' Magazine.

Some people seem to think that because rabbits' ears are so long it is a good reason to use them as a handle, says Harry Bradford in Boys' Life, the Boy Scouts' magazine. They have told me that "the mother rabbit carries her young around by the ears."

I have had a pretty good opportunity to observe such a feat, but I have never seen such a performance. It is all right to hold them by the ears, but I always put my hand or arm under their hind legs to lift them up, and then I know I am not hurting them.

One peculiarity I have always noticed about rabbits is their apparent lack of clear vision. If you will notice their eyes, you will see that they scarcely, if ever, move the eyeball to look up or down or at either side, as a cat does. You can't tell when they are looking directly at you as you can with a cat.

If you throw a carrot to them, they will not sight it and go directly to it, but will smell about with nose to it, and then they find it, and they may eat it.

PROCLAMATION

Proposing an Amendment to the Constitution of the State, Providing For Absent Voting.

Whereas, at the January session of the General Assembly of Maryland, Held in the year 1918, a Bill was passed, to wit: Chapter 20 of said Acts, proposing an additional section to Article 1 of the Constitution of Maryland, to be known as Section 1A and relating to Absent Voting, and which said Bill is in the words and figures following:

CHAPTER 20

An Act to propose an amendment to Article 1, title, "Elective Franchise," of the Constitution of the State of Maryland, by adding a new section thereto, to be known as Section 1A, the same relating to absent voting; and to provide for the submission of said amendment to the qualified voters of this State for adoption or rejection.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, three-fifths of all the members of each of the two Houses concurring, that the following new Section be and the same is hereby proposed as an Amendment to Article 1, title, "Elective Franchise," of the Constitution of the State of Maryland, to be known as Section 1A, and to be known as Section 1A, the same relating to absent voting, and which said Bill is in the words and figures following:

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, three-fifths of all the members of each of the two Houses concurring, that the following new Section be and the same is hereby proposed as an Amendment to Article 1, title, "Elective Franchise," of the Constitution of the State of Maryland, to be known as Section 1A, and to be known as Section 1A, the same relating to absent voting, and which said Bill is in the words and figures following:

Section 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That said foregoing Section hereby proposed, as an amendment to the Constitution, shall be at the next General Election for Members of Congress held in this State, and shall be submitted to the qualified voters of the State for adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the direction contained in Article XIV of the Constitution of this State, and at the said General Election the vote on the said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be printed the words "For the Constitutional Amendment" and "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as now provided by law, and immediately after said election due returns shall be made to the Governor of the vote for and against said proposed amendment as recorded by said Fourteenth Article of the Constitution, and further proceedings had in accordance with said Article Fourteen.

Approved March 22, 1918.
Now, therefore, I, Emerson C. Harrington, Governor of the State of Maryland, in pursuance of the direction contained in Section 1 of Article 14 of the Constitution of Maryland do hereby order and direct that this Proclamation, containing a full, true and correct copy of the text of said Chapter 20 of the Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland, Session of 1918, be published in at least two newspapers in each of the counties of the State where so many may be published, and where not more than one may be published, then in that newspaper, and in three newspapers published in the City of Baltimore, one of which shall be in the German language, once a week for at least three months next preceding the General Election to be held in the State of Maryland on Tuesday, November 5, 1918, at which election the said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be submitted in form and manner prescribed by the General Assembly, to the legal and qualified voters of the State for their adoption or rejection.

(The Great Seal of Maryland.) Given under my hand and the Great Seal of the State of Maryland, Done at the City of Annapolis this twentieth day of July, nineteen hundred and eighteen.

CAMPAIGN FOR NURSES CLOSED

Nine Young Ladies Offer Their Service.

The Campaign for nurses for the Students' Reserve Corps has closed in Wicomico County, and although the full quota of fifteen, which was assigned the County, was not reached, the Council of Defense is proud of the nine young ladies who have so nobly answered the call and offered themselves to serve wherever needed in this wonderful work.

The following have sent in applications: Miss Louisa Graham, Miss Edna Peters, Miss Florence Riley, Mrs. Josephine Givans, Miss Lydia Grier, Miss Stella Waller, Miss Lena Marshall, Miss K. Tilghman, all of Salisbury, and Miss Nellie Caulk, of Sharptown.

WAR GARDENS MADE GOOD.

Potatoes were a luxury in England little more than a year ago. Then came the wholesale planting of potatoes in back yards and small garden plots and fields all over the country. Farmers and professional market gardeners laughed at the agricultural efforts of people who had never wielded a hoe before. The wisecracks predicted stupendous failures of the crops these lawyers, shoemakers, newspaper reporters, and carpenters were trying to raise. But the know-it-alls were wrong and the amateur gardeners harvested so heavy a crop that there were two hundred thousand tons of potatoes over and above the country's requirements.

Potato bugs are unknown in England which, in pre-war days, often shipped the surplus of bumper potato crops to the United States.

Works Like a Hoe

Covers 8 Acres A Day

It does as good work as you can do with a hoe. It cuts every weed—none can dodge it—Keeps the surface in condition to readily absorb rain and produces a mulch or dirt blanket of fine soil which prevents the escape of soil moisture. One trip to the row, whether narrow or wide.

With one man! The Fowler does as much work as you can do with a two horse cultivator—and better work—because it cultivates shallow—has no prongs or teeth to destroy or disturb the crop roots. You can work right up to the plant with a Fowler. By removing plowfoot you can cultivate astride the row. You need this now.

Fast Friends

By GLORIA BARSALOUX

(Copyright, 1918, Western Newspaper Union.)

He had been a lonely man. For three years Dexter Blinn had been one of a group of young men working for a house where service was reduced to slavery. It had stunted all of ambition and happiness within him. It had dwarfed the intellect and made of normal industry seekers discontented, suspicious, unfriendly beings.

Lo, and behold! a sudden change. The plant of the money grasping corporation burned down one day and Dexter had sought another position. He found it with a small mercantile house with five other employees. It was a transition as from a dingy pit to a sublime mountain height. For the first time in years Dexter found strongly human companionship.

From the start the jolly five had cultivated him. Each of the open-hearted young married men vied in moving this reticent stranger into a more harmonious atmosphere. Within six months Dexter was a new man. He entered into all the impulses of his fellow employees in a heartsome, appreciative way. They invited him to their club parties, to their homes. He never referred to his own. Once, when Ned Wilson, the liveliest one of the group, spoke to him about his family, Dexter had briefly explained.

"Yes, there's three of them."

One day Ned said to his fellows: "Dexter seems to make a mystery of that family of three of his. I met a friend of mine, though, who knows where he lives. Says his wife is a modest, pretty young woman. Her mother and a younger sister live with them. Noticed a photograph in his desk a few days ago—a sweet-faced girl, of course his wife."

Once, when the talkative five were boasting of the peace, glory and comfort of their respective homes, Dexter allowed his imagination to rove blindly. "I say," he observed, "I can duplicate your brags. The meals they cook for me are the things to gloat over. There's Alice—sweet as a violet, and her mother, the grandest housekeeper that ever lived. The little sister can play the piano like an expert."

It was at the end of his two years service that Ned Wilson discovered that a certain date a week ahead was Dexter's birthday.

"Boys," he planned, "let's celebrate the event. Dexter is a prime good pal. We'll get up a surprise party—flowers, little friendly tokens, carry the refreshments and meet his wife. Then our families can get acquainted and we'll have our little circle complete."

The project was enthusiastically adopted. The jolly five, loaded down with various boxes and bundles, arrived at a neat little cottage at dusk. Ned assumed the direction of affairs. He halted his companions while he announced that he would spy out the land. There were lights in the front room of the house and he made out an old lady reading, and a young girl at a piano. Seated on the porch was another, evidently her married sister, the original of the photograph. He approached the lady.

"May I ask if Dexter is at home?" he questioned.

"Dexter? You mean Mr. Blinn," came the inquiry. "No, it is unusual with him, but he has gone out—for a short time, however, I think."

"Grand! capital!" chuckled Ned gleefully. "You are Mrs. Blinn. I'd know your face from your photograph in Dexter's desk. Myself and four chums from the office wish to give Dexter a surprise party. It's his birthday too. Won't you smuggle us with our traps into the house, and when Dexter arrives bolt him in upon us?"

The lady stared harder than ever. Her expressive face assumed a deep blush. She acted irresolute and dismayed. Then she said: "Surely, you and your friends will be welcome," and Ned darted away to marshal his chums into action, while the lady hurried into the home, beckoned to her mother, and held an excited whispered conversation with her.

"He called me Mrs. Blinn. We must not disappoint his friends," and various fragments of like import came hurriedly from the lips of daughter and mother.

Nine o'clock, ten o'clock, eleven o'clock, and no Dexter.

"Well," uttered Mrs. Burton forcibly, as she and her daughter were alone.

"I am glad we helped out the fiction, mother. Mr. Blinn has been so kind to us and just think all the nice things he has told his friends about us. Oh, mother—there he is now. You tell him."

"I declare," ejaculated Dexter, as he viewed flowers, presents and the general signs of recent jubilation. "What's all this?"

Smiling indulgently, Mrs. Burton told. Blushing shyly, Alice Burton watched the changing face of their two years' boarder.

"They drove me to desperation and I had to romance to keep up with them," stammered Dexter. "I hope I am forgiven. The scamps! Mrs. Blinn! Mother-in-law! Lots! Alice, you have found out what I think of you, second handed. Let me confirm it, Mrs. Blinn! Won't you make it true?"

And there was another party at the Burton home two months later, a wedding party, this time.

During November, the United States mints coined 77,000,000 pennies, 18,000,000 dimes and 11,000,000 nickels to meet the holiday trade demand.

Last year there were 180 strikes in Japan, involving 30,000 workers, compared with 50 strikes involving 9,000 workers in the year before.

Children Cry

THE TRUE FRIEND

By WALTER J. DELANEY.

(Copyright, 1918, by Western Newspaper Union.)

He was humble to the point of subservience—a stranger in a strange land, banished, odd-appearing and ill most of the time. Wo Tsin felt the abnormal environment and allowed it to crush him.

He seemed to cherish it as a blessing and a mercy that fate had awarded him the friendship of two noble souls, for into that it grew, despite their widely separated social status. Wade Burton was a young and struggling physician and Wo Tsin was a refugee from the Samoan Islands.

He looked neither kingly nor opulent the day he drifted into Springville in rags, fagged out, dusty and footsore from long travel. It was his good fortune to rest on the doorstep of the home of John Merle. He dozed there, hungry as he was. Alma Merle, coming out of the house with a dish in her hand, was somewhat startled at a sight of the forlorn figure. He was swarthy and almond-eyed, there was a certain oriental suggestion.

Alma stole silently past the slumberer and proceeded to gather the dish full of ripe, luscious berries. She re-entered the house by the kitchen door, to add a palatable dessert to the lunch she had prepared for herself. On a plate upon the little corner table she set forth a dainty but ample variety of edibles, carried a basin of water, a towel and some soap to an outside bench, and went around to the front of the house again.

The stranger roused up at her footsteps. "I am sorry," he stammered with difficulty gaining his feet. "I was very tired."

"And hungry?" intimated Alma, sympathizingly. "Come, you are my guest."

The plaintive-eyed refugee viewed her with a sort of mute adoration as she sat opposite him at the table, the generous, welcoming hostess complete. In struggling, faulty words he made her clearly aware of his situation.

"I loved a woman who betrayed me, plotted with an enemy, and I was banished—I, a king!" he narrated. "It is death to go back, but still I am of the old proud race. I have learned your language. I can make coconut ornaments, much valued, when I am well, but I have been ill and poor and homeless for a long time."

"You shall be so no longer, I am sure," encouraged Alma. "When my brother comes home he will surely feel helpful towards you." And this was how it was that Wo Tsin, working about the place and at the little village store Walter Merle operated, earned a quiet, comfortable harbor for his derelict spirit.

He found a new friend in Wade Burton. The fiancé of pretty Alma was a young doctor, just graduated and commencing life with only patients and courage as his capital. Wade took sufficient interest in Alma's pensioner to start him on the way to health, and the responsive Wo Tsin was duly grateful. One day Wo was pottering about the garden while Alma and Wade were seated on the porch. He lingered with an intelligent and thoughtful face.

"I see a long, arduous struggle towards getting on my feet here," Wade was saying. "I fear my only resource is to establish myself in the city."

"But that would part us!" remonstrated Alma sorrowfully.

"It may have to be," answered Wade. "Old Doctor Kline has offered his practice for sale."

"Is the price high?" asked Alma. "Three thousand dollars, and I have less than three hundred," was the desponding reply.

Next day Wo Tsin vanished. He had left a brief note. "Dear Little Missy," it ran; "for your sake and that of my good friend, Mr. Burton, I am gone. Some day I may return. The good fortune will come to you—be happy."

At the end of that week a town lawyer came to Wade. He handed him a signed document from Doctor Kline, transferring to him his practice.

"It is bought and paid for by a friend whose name I am not at liberty to disclose," said the attorney, and left Wade in wonderment.

Two months later Wo Tsin reappeared. Accompanying him was a shrewd-faced little man, whose keen eyes proclaimed the sharp bargainer.

"Doctor Burton," he said, "I have a strange story to tell. This friend of yours came to me in the city, asking for a loan of $3,000. I am a pawnbroker. He showed me, under his clothing, rigidly riveted about his waist, a gold band studded with precious gems. It seems this is an insignia of his former kingship, from which he must never part, according to the tenets of his people. He offered to pawn himself, and it."

"Because of love for the missy and her friend," murmured Wo Tsin, with a rapt look at both.

"A week ago," proceeded the money lender, "he saved the life of my little family and my wealth by outwitting a murderous burglar. He is happiest here. He says he can work out the debt."

"Never!" cried Burton, strangely stirred. "I will become security for it. Blessed Wo Tsin! you are more than a king; you are the truest man I ever knew!"

And time repaid the noble debt, and Wo Tsin no more longed for the empty bauble of kingly pride, as little children grew up in the happy household and loved and revered him as one of the family.

SALISBURY'S GREAT ATTRACTION Come To The FAIR AUGUST 20, 21, 22, 23, 1918

Thousands are coming, as they have done heretofore, to witness the Greatest Fair on the Eastern Shore, and to meet again old friends and acquaintances, and pass a pleasant day in the Metropolis of the Peninsula. In order to accommodate all who expect to come, the fair management has arranged the days as follows:

TUESDAY—Believing that our children should be given everything that we can to make them have a happy and pleasant time in the days when they are free from care and responsibilities, the Association has this year, as the past several years, decided to make Tuesday, the first day of the Fair, "Children's Day." On this day all children twelve years old and under will be admitted to the grounds free. We hope that the parents will take advantage of this and bring their children to be our guests on that day. Some attraction of special interest to the children will be arranged for on that day.

WEDNESDAY—In view of the fact that all our exhibits in farm and live stock will be in place and the premiums awarded, Wednesday has been designated as "Farmer's Day." We hope that the farmers throughout this section will turn-out and make it one of the biggest days of the Fair.

THURSDAY—This day will be known as "The Big Day." Everybody will be here, and if there is anyone that you want to see in this section of the world, come to the Fair Grounds on Thursday and you will find them there.

FRIDAY—In addition to the crowds from other sections, this is the day that Salisburians love to turn out and see and enjoy the wonders and amusements on the Fair Grounds. Practically everyone in Salisbury will attend the Fair sometime during the day.

is one filled with sensational aerial novelties in which incredible feats of strength and endurance are performed by the three wonderful artists who compose this company of THREE ALEX. These artists are expert in their particular line of work, and those who are fortunate enough to see them perform will be rewarded by many thrills as they watch the skilled maneuvers executed high in air.

WONDERFUL CYCLE TRICKS

Even in this day of almost universal automobile ownership, there are many of us who are not so old but that we can recall the pleasures of a few years ago that we had coasting down the hill or passing through some woodland path upon a modest bicycle; but in those days we little dreamed of the possibilities that exist in this little machine. The amazing control, the graceful and pleasing gyrations seen when a true artist of the wheel has control is simply surprising. We have secured as one of our free attractions McDONALD'S three scientific cyclists, who are known far and wide for their speed and accuracy in control of their peculiarly constructed unicycles and bicycles, fixed with wheels both high and low. You may have seen bicycle tricks by the score but this, we venture to say, will prove not only different from all others but better, more interesting and more entertaining.

The Great Midway

When this Fair first started, the management found itself handicapped because of the fact that a suitable midway was hard to obtain. After trying various methods of raising the standard of our midway, we tried a scheme of placing it in the hands of men who made a business out of this form of entertainment. We found this to be a decided improvement over our old method of running a midway. Again this year the midway has been placed in the hands of a well known reputable amusement company of New York City, who guarantees to give us a large selection of clean wholesome shows and interesting animal and other exhibits. We believe that those who attend the Fair this year will find that our midway will be a very attractive place where one can find almost any form of amusement that appeals to them.

Free Attractions AMERICA'S SENSATION

In addition to the shows, exhibits and other attractions on the midway, the management has secured a number of attractions which will be exhibited free to all on the grounds. The first of these will be one that is booked for the purpose of creating more talk than any similar act of its kind in America today. The act

THE FLYING DUTCHMAN

Everybody loves a laugh. No moment is too serious but what a good comedy will ease and soften. We have secured LEDEGAR, a famous comedian, who will appear in his great comedy success, "The Flying Dutchman." Among his many comical stunts there will be scattered through many acts truly difficult to perform, such as tight rope walking, dancing, sensational single and double somersaults. LEDEGAR is known as "a man that walks in the air." His production is hard to beat and you cannot watch him and keep your face straight if you have within you the smallest grain of humor. He is not only "one in many," but he will be found to be also "many in one."

In addition to all the acts that have been enumerated above, the Fair will have many things to amuse and entertain both young and old; and those who have been our patrons in the past know what the GREAT SALISBURY FAIR produces. This year will not be an exception.

THRILLING RACES

The list of entries in the various races will no doubt be the largest in the history of the Great Salisbury Fair, and there are many very fast horses in the bunch that will smash some records on the Peninsula.

MOTORCYCLE RACES

This is the only Fair on the Eastern Shore where you can witness professional motorcyclists contesting in the races. These will be worth coming miles to see.

In addition to all these there will be large exhibits of Farm Products, Live Stock, Machinery, Automobiles, Vehicles, Fancy Work, Canned Goods, and hundreds of other things too numerous to mention, which will claim your attention, and admiration.

Don't Forget The Dates

AUGUST 20, 21, 22, 23, 1918

And come to see the GREATEST FAIR to be held this year on the Eastern Shore

War Time Sweeteners

AMERICA has several excellent war time sweeteners that will be used largely during the shortage in the sugar supply.

They are maple sugar, syrups, honey and molasses and may be used in preparing desserts and other dishes requiring sweetening.

When a cup of syrup or honey is used to replace a cup of sugar the liquid in the recipes should be decreased one-fourth. One-third of a cupful of sugar is equivalent to one-third of a cup of honey, about one-half cup of syrup and about one-half cup of corn sugar. One-fourth of a cup of sugar is equal to about one-half cup of syrup or one-third cup of corn sugar. One tablespoon of sugar is equal to one tablespoon of honey, about one and one-half tablespoons of syrup and one and one-third tablespoons of corn sugar.

Sugar may be saved by the use of raisins, dates, figs, dried pears and fruit pastes used on the breakfast cereals. Fruit marmalades, butters and jellies should be used to take the place of the ordinary sweetening at a meal and not as accessories to it. Fruits may be preserved without sugar. It may be added when sugar is more plentiful.

Preserving demands this year a thin syrup instead of a heavy syrup.

If sugar is used one-half of the amount may be replaced by another sweetener.

Drying is a means of preserving (without sugar) apples, cherries, strawberries and black caps.

When ready to use they may have added the needed sugar in the form of a syrup. When sugar is more plentiful fruit juices may be made into jellies or may be used as fruit juices with or without sugar, as beverages, fruit jellies and frozen desserts.

Fresh fruits supply the place of sugar in the diet. They should be used freely. Desserts where sugar is scarce may be made of gelatins, junkets, custards, puddings and cakes.

Saving Sugar Saves Shipping

AMERICAN families would have less sugar than the people of war torn France, if we depended entirely on our home-grown sugar stocks.

Approximately 75 per cent. of our sugar is shipped to our shores. We produce about 1,000,000 tons of sugar a year. Our imports from abroad amount to over 8,000,000 tons a year in normal times.

The United States Food Administration asks each family to limit its use of sugar to two pounds per month per person for household use. The military situation demands that every available ship be placed at the disposal of the Army or Navy. When we save sugar, we save shipping.

COTTAGE CHEESE IS CHEAP

A saving of $30,000,000 worth of valuable food is sought in the campaign which the United States Food Administration and the Department of Agriculture have launched to curtail this country's enormous waste of skim milk. Agents are working from Atlantic to Pacific, calling attention to the score of palatable forms in which this nutritious commodity can be prepared.

In its most familiar form it bobs up as Cottage Cheese, which is equal to meat in food value. One pound of cottage cheese is as good as a dozen eggs.

In many cities milk distributors are sending their cottage cheese around on their routes, and the housewife is able to place her order for it along with the milk.

WHY ENGLAND HONORS HOOVER —KEPT WOLF FROM DOOR

"The war is over—we are beaten," the British food controller is reported to have exclaimed when told the U. S. had already shipped its whole surplus of wheat. Britain at the beginning of the year was consuming half a million tons of food each month more than the margin of safety permitted. America then—not just the Government but the loyal American people—saved the day. The danger of Britain being starved out of the Allied Camp was averted till next summer at all events. The problem now is to build up a reserve so that no risk may again be run and the whole national energy thrown into the job of "getting on with the war."

If the United States had gone selfishly ahead, eating wheat as usual, and not saving in export meats, actual starvation might have faced the people of the United Kingdom before now. Fortunately, Mr. Hoover's masterful organizing genius was getting results, and the breakdown in transportation in the United States was gradually remedied. The American people have saved out of their domestic supply of wheat about 100,000,000 bushels, and likewise have enabled the Food Commission to export far more meat, in the last six months, than was originally expected. In April, exports of bacon were nearly 100,000 tons, compared with 11,000 tons in April, 1917.

Having performed such splendid service in conjunction with Lord Rhonda, Mr. Hoover is fully entitled to the exceptional honors showered on him in England.

This splendid achievement, in which the people of Maryland played their full share, does not mean that wheat thrift can now cease. Efforts must not be relaxed. Next summer, if the war still lasts, the United States will again have the responsibility of keeping fed the armies and civilized population of the Allies whose man-power long ago was removed from the fields to the trenches. No chances can be run unless all the sacrifices of the past are to count for naught. A reserve must be built up. Therefore it is not possible that there should be here any material modifications in the wheat regulations.

A NERVOUS BREAKDOWN

Miss Kelly Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Health.

Newark, N. J.—"For about three years I suffered from nervous breakdown and got so weak I could hardly stand, and had headaches every day. I tried everything I could think of and was under a physician's care for two years. A friend had used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and she told me about it. From the first day I took it I began to feel better and now I am well and able to do most any kind of work. I have been recommending the Compound ever since and give you my permission to publish this letter."—Miss FLO KELLY, 476 So. 14th St., Newark, N. J.

The reason this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, was so successful in Miss Kelly's case was because it went to the root of her trouble, restored her to a normal healthy condition and as a result her nervousness disappeared.

THE BIBLE OR TRADITION.

In his discourse at the tent Sunday evening on the subject "The Bible or Tradition," Evangelist Andross outlined some of the fundamental differences of belief between Protestants and Roman Catholics. The Evangelist declared that in its last analysis, the one great underlying difference will be found to be the authority recognized as the final court of appeals in matters of doctrine. "The true Protestant," said Mr. Andross, "recognizes the Bible and the Bible only as the ultimate authority, while the Roman Catholic accepts Tradition as an infallible authority in the interpretation of scripture." The speaker said in part:

"If we are Protestants, we surely have some reason for protesting. It is good for us to occasionally review our fundamental beliefs as Protestants that we may keep constantly in mind the reason or basis of our hope. When in 1529 at the diet of Spire the reformers presented the famous Protest, that henceforward gave to them the name Protestant, they protested the repeal of a previous decision giving to them the privilege of worshipping God according to the dictates of their consciences. In this Protest the following important paragraph occurs: 'Now, seeing that . . . there is no sure doctrine but such as is conformable to the word of God; that the Lord forbids the teaching of any other doctrine; that each text of the holy Scriptures ought to be explained by other and clearer texts; that this holy book is in all things necessary for the Christian, easy of understanding, and calculated to scatter the darkness, we are resolved, with the grace of God, to maintain the pure and exclusive preaching of his only word, such as it is contained in the biblical books of the Old and New Testament, without adding any thing thereto that may be contrary to it. This word is the only truth; it is the sure rule of all doctrine and of all life, and can never fail or deceive us. He who builds on this foundation shall stand against all the powers of hell, while all the human vanities that are set up against it shall fall before the face of God.' 'History of the Reformation, by D. Aubigne. Vol. IV, p. 76.

"This," said Mr. Andross, is the true Protestant platform—"The Bible, the Bible only." We find this taught in the Bible itself. 'And that from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus. All scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works.' 2 Tim. 3: 15-17.

This is indeed the true doctrine of Protestantism and is shown by the declarations of faith of the various leading denominations. Note the Methodist statement: 'The Holy Scriptures contain all things necessary to salvation in this world—such as the knowledge of God, of his will, of his promises, of his judgments, of his rewards, of his punishments, of his glory, of his kingdom, of his church, of his members, of his duties, of his prayers, of his worship, of his sacraments, of his ordinances, of his discipline, of his ## "OUTWITTING THE HUN"

By LIEUTENANT PAT O'BRIEN.

© 1918, by PAT O'BRIEN

Tramp! Tramp! "Halt!" Again an order was given in German, and although I did not understand it I am willing to bless every word of it, because it resulted in the soldiers turning right about face, marching up the stairs again, through the hall and out of the front door and away!

I could hardly believe my ears. It seemed almost too good to be true that they could have given up the search just as they were about to come upon their quarry, but unless my ears deceived me that was what they had done.

The possibility that the whole thing might be a German ruse did not escape me, and I remained in the cellar for nearly an hour after they had apparently departed before I ventured to move, listening intently in the meanwhile for the slightest sound which would reveal the presence of a sentry upstairs.

Not hearing a sound I began to feel that they had indeed given up the hunt, for I did not believe that a German officer would be so considerate of his men as to try to trap me rather than carry the cellar by force if they had the slightest idea that I was there.

I took off my shoes and crept softly and slowly to the cellar steps and then step by step, placing my weight down gradually so as to prevent the steps from creaking, I climbed to the top. The sight that met my eyes as I glanced into the kitchen told me the whole story. The water faucets had been ripped from the sinks, the water pipes having been torn off, and gas fixtures, cooking utensils and everything else which contained even the smallest proportion of the metals the Germans so badly needed had been taken from the kitchen. I walked upstairs now with more confidence, feeling tolerably assured that the soldiers hadn't been after me at all, but had been merely collecting metal and other materials which they expected an elaborate dwelling house like the one in which I was concealed to yield.

Later I heard that the Germans have taken practically every ounce of brass, copper and wood they could lay their hands on in Belgium. Even the brass out of pianos has been ruthlessly removed, the serious damage done to valuable property by the removal of only an insignificant proportion of metal never being taken into consideration. I learned, too, that all dogs over fourteen inches high had been seized by the Germans. This furnished lots of speculation among the Belgians as to what use the Germans were putting the animals to, the general impression apparently being that they were being used for food!

This, however, seemed much less likely to me than that they were being employed as dispatch dogs in the trenches, the same as we use them on our side of the line. They might possibly kill the dogs and use their skins for leather and their carcasses for tallow, but I feel quite sure that the Huns are by no means so short of food that they have to eat dogs yet awhile. Indeed, I want to repeat here what I have mentioned before; if anyone has the idea that this war can be won by starving the Huns, he hasn't the slightest idea how well provided the Germans are in that respect. They have considered their food needs in connection with their resources for several years to come and they have gone at it in such a methodical, systematic way, taking into consideration every possible contingency, that provided there is not an absolute crop failure, there isn't the slightest doubt in my mind that they can last for years, and the worst of it is they are very cocksure about it themselves.

It is true that the German soldiers want peace. As I watched them through the keyhole in the door I thought how unfavorably they compared with our men. They marched along the street without laughter, without joking, without singing. It was quite apparent that the war is telling on them. I don't believe I saw a single German soldier who didn't look as if he had lost his best friend—and he probably had.

At the same time there is a big difference—certainly a difference of several years—between wishing the war was over and giving up, and I don't believe the German rank and file any more than their leaders have the slightest idea at this time of giving up at all.

But to return to my experience while concealed in the house. After the visit of the soldiers, which left the house in a wretched condition, I decided that I would continue my journey towards the frontier, particularly as I had gotten all I could out of Huygier, or rather he had gotten all he was going to get out of me.

During my confinement in the house I feel more comfortable even when German soldiers were about. Through the keyhole I had studied very closely the gait of the Belgians, the slovenly droop that characterized most of them, and their general appearance, and I felt that in my own dirty and unshaven condition I must have looked as much like the average poor Belgian as a man could. The only thing that was against me was my height. I was several inches taller than even the tallest Belgians. I had often thought that red hair would have gone good with my name, but now, of course, I was mighty glad that I was not so endowed, for red-haired Belgians are about as rare as German chivalry.

There are many, no doubt, who will wonder why I did not get more help than I did at this time. It is easily answered. When a man is in hourly fear of his life and the country is full of spies, as Belgium certainly was, he is not going to help just anyone that comes along seeking aid. One of the German's most successful ways of trapping the Belgians has been to pose as an English or French prisoner who has escaped, appeal to them for aid, implicate as many as possible, and then turn the whole German police force loose on them. As I look back on those days I think it remarkable that I received as much help as I did, but when people are starving under the conditions now forced upon those unfortunate people, it is a great temptation to surrender these escaped prisoners to German authorities and receive the handsome rewards offered for them—or for alien spies, as I was classed at that time.

The passport which I had described me as a Spanish sailor, but I was very dubious about its value. If I could have spoken Spanish fluently it might have been worth something to me, but the few words I knew of the language would not have carried me very far if I had been confronted with a Spanish interpreter. I decided to use the passport only as a last resort, preferring to act the part of a deaf and dumb Belgian peasant as far as it would carry me.

Before I finally left the house I had a remarkable experience which I shall remember as long as I live.

CHAPTER XIV.

A Night of Disillusion.

During the first two days I spent with Huygier after I had first arrived in the big city, he had told me, among other things, of a moving picture show in town which he said I might have a chance to see while there.

"It is free every night in the week except Saturdays and Sundays," he said, "and once you are inside you would not be apt to be bothered by anyone except when they come to take your order for something to drink. While there is no admission, patrons are expected to eat or drink while enjoying the pictures."

A day or two later, while walking the streets at night in search for food, I had passed this place and was very much tempted to go in and spend a few hours, particularly as it would perhaps give me an opportunity to buy something to eat, although I was at a loss to know how I was going to ask for what I wanted.

While trying to make up my mind whether it was safe for me to go in I walked half a block past the place, and when I turned back again and reached the entrance with my mind made up that I would take the chance I ran full tilt into a German officer who was just coming out.

That settled all my hankers for moving pictures that night. "Where you came from, my friend," I figured, "there must be more like you! I guess it is a good night for walking."

The next day, however, in recalling the incident of the evening before, it seemed to me that I had been rather foolish. What I needed more than anything else at that time was confidence. Before I could get to the frontier I would have to confront German soldiers many times, because there were more of them between this city and Holland than in any section of the country through which I had so far traveled. Safety in these contingencies would depend largely upon the calmness I displayed. It wouldn't do to get all excited at the mere sight of a spiked helmet. The Belgians, I had noticed, while careful to obey the orders of the Huns, showed no particular fear of them, and it seemed to me the sooner I cultivated the same feeling of indifference the better I would be able to carry off the part I was playing.

For this reason I made up my mind then and there that, officers or no officers, I would go to that show that night and sit it through no matter what happened. It would be in the adventure, it occurred to me that perhaps after all that theater was about one of the safest places I could attend because that was about the last place Germans would expect to find a fugitive English officer in even if they were searching for me.

As soon as evening came, therefore, I started out for the theatre. I fixed myself up as well as possible. I had on a fairly decent pair of pants which Huygier had given me and I used a clean handkerchief as a collar.

With my hair brushed up and my beard trimmed as neatly as possible with a pair of rusty scissors which I had found in the house, while my appearance was not exactly that of a Beau Brummel, I don't think I looked much worse than the average Belgian. In these days the average Belgian is very poorly dressed at best.

I can't say I had no misgivings as I made my way to the theatre; certainly I was going there more for discipline than pleasure, but I had made up my mind that I was going there to see it through.

The entrance to the theatre or beer garden, for it was as much one as the other, was on the side of the building and was reached by way of an alley which ran alongside. Near the door was a ticket-seller's booth, but as this was one of the free nights there was no one in the booth.

I marched slowly down the alley imitating as best I could the indifferent gait of the Belgians, and when I entered the theatre endeavored to act as though I had been there many times before. A hasty survey of the layout of the place was sufficient to enable me to select my seat. It was early and there were not more than half a dozen people in the place at that time, so that I had my choice.

There was a raised platform, perhaps two feet high, all around the walls of the place except at the end where the stage was located. On this platform tables were arranged and there were tables on the floor proper as well.

I decided promptly that the safest place for me was as far back as possible, where I would not be in the line of vision of others in back of me. Accordingly I slouched over to a table on the platform directly opposite the stage and I took the seat against the wall. The whole place was now in front of me. I could see everything that was going on and everyone who came in, but no one, except those who sat at my own table, would notice me unless they deliberately turned around to look.

The place began to fill up rapidly. Every second person who came in the place seemed to me to be a German soldier, but when they were seated at the tables and I got a chance later on to make a rough count, I found that in all there were not more than a hundred soldiers in the place and there must have been several hundred civilians.

The first people to sit at my table were a Belgian and his wife. The Belgian sat next to me and his wife next to him. I was hoping that other civilians would occupy the remaining two seats at my table, because I did not relish the idea of having to sit through the show with German soldiers within a few feet of me. That would certainly have spoiled my pleasure for the evening.

Every uniform that came in the door gave me cause to worry until I was sure it was not coming in my direction. I don't suppose there was a single soldier who came in the door whom I didn't follow to his seat—with my eyes.

Just before they lowered the lights, two German officers entered. They stood at the door for a moment looking the place over. Then they made a beeline in my direction and I must confess my heart started to beat a little faster. I hoped that they would find another seat before they came to my vicinity, but they were getting nearer and nearer and I realized with a sickening sensation that they were headed directly for the two seats at my table, and that was indeed the case.

These two seats were in front of the table facing the stage and except when the officers would be eating or drinking their backs were toward me, and there was considerable consolation in that. From my seat I could have reached right over and touched one of them on the back. It would be

"OUTWITTING THE HUN"

LIBRETTIN

PAT O'BRIEN

If I could have gotten away with it safely.

As the officers seated themselves, a waiter came to us with a printed bill-of-fare and program. Fortunately, he waited on the others first and I listened intently to their orders. The officers ordered some light wine, but my Belgian neighbor ordered "Bock" for himself and his wife, which was what I had decided to order anyway, as that was the only thing I could say. Heaven knows I would far rather have ordered something to eat, and I was afraid to take a chance at the pronunciation of the dishes it set forth.

There were a number of drinks listed which I might safely enough have ordered. For instance, I noticed "Lemon Squash, 1.50," "Ginger Beer, 1.00," "Sparkling Dry Cider, 1.00," "Apollinaris, 1.00" and "Schweppes Soda, 0.80." But it occurred to me that the mere fact that I selected something that was listed in English might attract attention to me and something in my pronunciation might give further cause for suspicion.

It seemed better to parrot the Belgian and order "Bock" and that was what I decided to do.

One item on the bill of fare tantalized me considerably. Although it was listed among the "Priszen der dranken," which I took to mean "Prices of drinks," it sounded very much to me like something to eat, and Heaven knows I would rather have had one honest mouthful of food than all the drinks in the world. The item I refer to was "Doppel Gerstein de Flesch (Micheaux)." A double portion of anything would have been mighty welcome to me, but I would have been content with a single "gerstein" if I had only had the courage to ask for it.

To keep myself as composed as possible I devoted a lot of attention to that bill-of-fare, and I think by the time the waiter came around I almost knew it by heart. One drink that almost made me laugh aloud was listed as "Lemonades gazeuses," but I might as well have introduced myself to the German officers by my right name and rank as attempt to pronounce it.

When the waiter came to me, therefore, I said "Bock" as casually as I could, and I felt somewhat relieved that I had gotten through that part of the ordeal so easily.

While the waiter was away I had a chance to examine the bill-of-fare and I observed that a glass of beer cost 80 centimes. The smallest change I had was a two-mark, paper bill.

Apparently the German officers were similarly fixed and when they offered their bill to the waiter he handed it back to them with a remark which I took to mean that he couldn't make change.

Right there I was in a quandary. To offer him my bill after he had just told the officers he didn't have change would have seemed strange, and yet I couldn't explain to him that I was in the same boat and he would have to come to me again later. The only thing to do, therefore, was to offer him the bill as though I hadn't heard or noticed what had happened with the Germans, and I did so. He said the same thing to me as he had said to the officers, perhaps a little more sharply, and gave me back the bill. Later on, he returned to the table with a handkerchief change and I closed the transaction. I gave him 25 centimes as a tip—I had never yet been to a place where it was necessary to talk to do that.

During my first half hour in that theatre, to say I was on pins and needles is to express my feelings mildly. The truth of the matter is I was never so uneasy in my life. Every minute seemed like an hour, and a dozen times I was on the point of getting up and leaving. There were altogether too many soldiers in the place to suit me, and when the German officers seated themselves right at my table I thought that was about all I could stand. As it was, however, the lights went out shortly afterwards, and in the dark I felt considerably easier.

After the first picture, when the lights went up again, I had regained my composure considerably and I took advantage of the opportunity to study the various types of people in the place.

From my seat I had a splendid chance to see them all. At one table there was a German medical corps officer with three Red Cross nurses. That was the only time I had ever seen a German nurse, for when I was in the hospital I had seen only men orderlies. Nurses didn't work so near the first line trenches.

The German soldiers at the different tables were very quiet and orderly. They drank beer and conversed among themselves, but there was no hilarity or rough-housing of any kind. As I sat there, within arm's reach of those German officers and realized that they would have given to know what a chance they had to capture an escaped British officer, I could hardly help smiling to myself, but when I thought of the big risk I was taking, more or less unnecessarily, I began to wonder whether I had not acted foolishly in undertaking it.

Nevertheless, the evening passed off uneventfully and when the show was over I mixed with the crowd and disappeared, feeling very proud of myself and with a good deal more confidence than I had enjoyed at the start.

I had passed a night which will live in my life as long as I live. The bill of fare and program and a "throw-away" bill advertising the name of the attraction which was to be presented the following week which was handed to me as I came out. I still have and they are among the most valued souvenirs of my adventure.

CHAPTER XV.

Observations in a Belgian City. One night shortly before I left this city, our alarmen raided the place. I didn't venture out of the house at the time, but the next night I thought I would go out and see what damage had been done.

When it became dark I left the house accordingly and mixed with the crowd, which consisted largely of Germans. I went from one place to another to see what our "strapping" had accomplished. Naturally I avoided speaking to anyone. If a man or woman appeared about to speak to me, I just turned my head and looked or walked away in some other direction. I must have been taken for an unsocial sort of individual a good many times, and if I had encountered the same person twice I suppose my conduct might have aroused suspicion.

I had a first-class observation of the damage that was really done by our bombs. One bomb had landed very near the main railroad station and if it had been only thirty yards nearer would have completely demolished it. As the station was undoubtedly our alarmen's objective I was very much impressed with the accuracy of his aim. It is by no means an easy thing to hit a building from the air when you are going at anywhere from fifty to one hundred miles an hour and are being shot at from beneath from a dozen different angles—unless, of course, you are taking one of those desperate chances and flying so low that you cannot very well miss your mark and the Huns can't very well miss you either!

I walked by the station and mingled with the crowds which stood in the entrances. They paid no more attention to me than they did to real Belgians, and the fact that the lights were all out in this city at night made it impossible anyway for anyone to get as good a look at me as if it had been light.

During the time that I was in this city I suppose I wandered from one end of it to the other. In one place, where the German staff had its headquarters, a huge German flag hung from the window, and I think I would have given ten years of my life to have stolen it. Even if I could have pulled it down, however, it would have been impossible for me to have concealed it, and to have carried it away with me as a souvenir, therefore, I was forced out of the question.

As I went along the street one night a lady standing on the corner stopped me and spoke to me. My first impulse, of course, was to answer her, explaining that I could not understand, but I stopped myself in time, pointed to my ears and mouth and shook my head, indicating that I was deaf and dumb, and she nodded understandingly and walked on. Incidents of that kind were not unusual, and I was always in fear that the time would come when some inquisitive and suspicious German would encounter me, and not be so easily satisfied.

There are many things that I saw in this city which, for various reasons, I have not written down. I was always in fear that the time would come when some inquisitive and suspicious German would encounter me, and not be so easily satisfied.

It used to amuse me as I went along the streets of this town, looking in the shop windows with German soldiers at my side, looking at the same things, to think how close I was to them and they had no way of knowing I was quite convinced that if I were discovered my fate would have been sharply, and gave me back the bill. Later on, he returned to the table with a handkerchief change and I closed the transaction. I gave him 25 centimes as a tip—I had never yet been to a place where it was necessary to talk to do that.

One night I walked boldly across a park. I heard footsteps behind me and turning round saw two German soldiers. I slowed up a trifle to let them get ahead of me. It was rather dark and I got a chance to see what a wonderful uniform the German military authorities have picked out. The soldiers had not gone more than a few feet ahead of me when they disappeared in the darkness like one of those melting pictures on the moving picture screen.

As I wandered through the streets I frequently glanced in the cafe windows as I passed. German officers were usually dining there, but they didn't conduct themselves with anything like the light-heartedness which characterizes the allied officers in London and Paris. I was rather surprised at this because in this part of Belgium they were much freer than they would have been in Berlin, where, I understand, food is comparatively scarce and the restrictions are very strict.

As I have said, my own condition in this city was in some respects worse than it had been when I was making my way through the open country. While I had a place to sleep and my clothes were no longer constantly soaking, my opportunities for getting food were considerably less than they had been. Nearly all the time I was half famished, and I decided that I would get out of there at once, since I was entirely through with Huyler.

My physical condition was greatly improved. While the lack of food showed itself on me, I had regained some of my strength. My wounds were healed, and my ankle was still considerably enlarged. I felt that I was in better shape than I had been at any time since my leap from the train, and I was ready to go through whatever was in store for me.

I Leave for the Frontier.

To get out of the city, it would be necessary to pass two guards. This I had learned in the course of my walks at night, having frequently traveled to the city limits with the idea of finding out just what conditions I would have to meet when the time came for me to leave.

A German soldier's uniform, however, no longer worried me as it had at first. I had mingled with the Huns so much in the city that I began to feel that I was really a Belgian, and I assumed the indifference that they seemed to feel.

I decided, therefore, to walk out of the city in the daytime, when the sentries would be less apt to be on the watch. It worked fine. I was not held up at all, the sentries evidently taking me for a Belgian peasant on his way to work.

Traveling faster than I had ever done before since my escape, I was soon out in the open country, and the first Belgian I came to I approached for food. He gave me half of his lunch and we sat down on the side of the road to eat it. Of course, he tried to talk to me, but I used the old ruse of pretending I was deaf and dumb and he was quite convinced that it was so. He made various efforts to talk to me in pantomime, but I could not make out what he was getting at, and I think he must have concluded that I was not only half starved, deaf and dumb, but "looney" in the bargain.

When night came I looked around for a place to rest. I had decided to travel in the daytime as well as at night, because I understood that it was only a few miles from the frontier, and I was naturally anxious to get there at the earliest possible moment, although I realized that there I would encounter the most hazardous part of my whole adventure. To get through the heavily guarded barrier was a problem that I hated to think of even, although the hours I spent endeavoring to devise some way of outwitting the Huns were many.

It had occurred to me, for instance, that it would not be such a difficult matter to vault over the electric fence, which was only nine feet high. In college, I knew a ten-foot vault is considered a high-school boys' accomplishment, but there were two great difficulties in the way of this solution. In the first place I was not a pole of the right length, weight and strength to serve the purpose. More particularly, however, the pole-vault idea seemed to me to be out of the question because of the fact that on either side of the electric fence, six feet from it, was a six-foot barbed wire barrier. To vault safely over a nine-foot electrically charged fence was one thing, but to combine with it a twelve-foot broad vault was a feat which even a college athlete in the pink of condition would be apt to flunk. Indeed, I don't believe it is possible.

Another plan that seemed half-way reasonable was to build a pair of stilts about twelve or fourteen feet high and walk over the barriers one by one. As a youngster I had acquired considerable skill in stilt-walking and I have no doubt that with the proper equipment it would have been quite feasible to have walked out of Belgium as easily as possible in that way, but whether or not I was going to have a chance to construct the necessary stilts remained to be seen.

There were a good many bicycles in use by the German soldiers in Belgium and it had often occurred to me that if I could have stolen one, the three would have made excellent gloves and insulated coverings for my feet in case it was necessary for me to attempt to climb over the electric fence bodily. But as I had never been able to steal a bicycle this avenue of escape was closed to me.

I decided to wait until I arrived at the barrier and then make up my mind how to proceed.

To find a decent place to sleep that night, I crawled under a barbed wire fence, thinking it led into some field. As I passed under, one of the bars caught in my coat and in trying to pull myself from it, I shook the fence for several yards.

Instantly there came out of the night the nerve-racking command: "Halt!" Again I feared I was done for. I crouched close down on the ground in the darkness, not knowing whether to let my legs and trust to the Huns' missing me in the darkness if he fired, or stay where I was. It was foggy as well as dark, and although I knew the sentry was only a few feet away from me I decided to stand, or rather lie, flat. I think my heart made almost as much noise as the rattling of the wire in the first place, and it was a tense few moments to me.

I heard the German say a few words to himself, but didn't understand them, of course, and then he made a sound as if to call a dog, and I realized that his theory of the noise he had heard was that a dog had made its way through the fence.

For perhaps five minutes I didn't stir, and then figuring that the German had probably continued on his beat I crept quietly under the wire again, this time being mighty careful to hug the ground so close that I wouldn't touch the wire, and made off in a different direction. Evidently the barbed wire fence had been thrown around an ammunition depot or something of the kind, and it was not a field at all that I had tried to get into.

OUR SAVED FOOD FED THE ALLIES

Food Administrator Writes President America Conserved 141,000,000 Bushels Wheat.

CREDIT DUE TO WOMEN

Meat and Fat Shipments Increased by 844,000,000 Pounds.

Conservation measures applied by the American people enabled the United States to ship to the Allied peoples and to our own forces overseas 141,000,000 bushels of wheat and 844,000,000 pounds of meat during the past year, valued in all at $1,400,000,000. This was accomplished in the face of a serious food shortage in this country, bespeaking the wholeheartedness and patriotism with which the American people have met the food crisis abroad. Food Administrator Hoover, in a letter to President Wilson, explains how the situation was met. The voluntary conservation program fostered by the Food Administration enabled the piling up of the millions of bushels of wheat during 1917-18 and the shipment of meat during 1917-18.

The total value of all food shipments to Allied destinations amounted to $1,400,000,000, all this food being bought through or in collaboration with the Food Administration. These figures are all based on official reports and represent food exports for the harvest year that closed June 30, 1918. The shipments of meats and fats (including meat products, dairy products, vegetable oils, etc.) to Allied destinations were as follows:

Fiscal year 1916-17.....2,104,500,000 lbs.

Fiscal year 1917-18.....3,011,100,000 lbs.

Increase.....844,000,000 lbs.

Our slaughterable animals at the beginning of the last fiscal year were not appreciably larger than the year before and particularly in hogs; they were probably less. The increase in shipments is due to conservation and the extra weight of animals added by our farmers. The full effect of these efforts began to bear their best results in the last half of the fiscal year, when the exports to the Allies were 2,123,100,000 pounds, as against 1,268,500,000 pounds in the same period of the year before. This compares with an average of 801,000,000 pounds of total exports for the same half years in the three-year pre-war period.

In cereals and cereal products reduced to terms of cereal bushels our shipments to Allied destinations have been:

Fiscal year 1916-17.....2,250,000,000 bushels

Fiscal year 1917-18.....2,440,000,000 bushels

SUMMING UP THE EVIDENCE.

Many Salisbury People Have Been Called As Witnesses.

Week after week has been published the testimony of Salisbury people—kidney sufferers—bachache victims—people who have endured many forms of kidney, bladder or urinary disorders. These witnesses have used Doan's Kidney Pills. All have given their enthusiastic approval. It's the same everywhere. 50,000 American men and women are publicly recommending Doan's—always in the home papers. Isn't it a wonderful, convincing mass of proof? If you are a sufferer your verdict must be "Try Doan's first."

Here's one more Salisbury case. John H. Connelly, 503 E. Isabella St., says: "When I went to Virginia, I was obliged to drink impure water and I began to suffer from my kidneys. My back also became weak. I used two boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills and they removed all the trouble. Occasional use of Doan's since has prevented a return attack. This medicine cannot be praised too highly."

Mr. Connelly is only one of many Salisbury people who have gratefully endorsed Doan's Kidney Pills. If your back aches—if your kidneys bother you, don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—ask distinctly for DOAN'S KIDNEY PILLS, the same that Mr. Connelly had—the remedy backed by home testimony. 60 cents at all stores. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y. "When Your Back is Lame—Remember the Name."

1917-18 to Allied destinations were: Wheat 181,000,000 bushels and of rye 13,000,000 bushels, a total of 194,000,000 bushels.

The exports to Allied destinations during the fiscal year 1916-17 were: Wheat 135,100,000 bushels and rye 2,900,000 bushels, a total of 138,000,000 bushels. In addition some 10,000,000 bushels of 1917 wheat are now in port for Allied destinations or en route thereto. The total shipments to Allied countries from our last harvest of wheat will be therefore, about 141,000,000 bushels, or a total of 154,900,000 bushels of prime breadstuffs. In addition to this we have shipped some 10,000,000 bushels to neutrals dependent upon us, and we have received some imports from other quarters.

"This accomplishment of our people in this matter stands out even more clearly if we bear in mind that we had available in the fiscal year 1916-17 from net carry-over and as surplus over our normal consumption about 200,000,000 bushels of wheat which we were able to export that year without trenching on our home loaf," Mr. Hoover said. "This last year, however, owing to the large failure of the 1917 wheat crop, we had available from net carry-over and production and imports only just about our normal consumption. Therefore our wheat shipments to Allied destinations represent approximately savings from our own wheat bread.

"These figures, however, do not fully convey the volume of the effort and sacrifice made during the past year by the whole American people. Despite the magnificent effort of our agricultural population in planting a much increased acreage in 1917, not only was there a very large failure in wheat, but also the corn failed to mature properly, and our corn is our dominant crop. "I am sure," Mr. Hoover wrote in concluding his report, "that all the millions of our people, agricultural as well as urban, who have contributed to these results should feel a very definite satisfaction that in a year of universal food shortages in the northern hemisphere all of those people joined together against Germany have come through into sight of the coming harvest not only with wealth and strength fully maintained, but with only temporary periods of hardship. "It is difficult to distinguish between various sections of our people—the homes, public eating places, food trades, urban or agricultural populations—in assessing credit for these results, but no one will deny the dominant part of the American women."

FARM STOCK

DEHORNING CATTLE IS EASY

Operation is Simple and Not Difficult When Performed on Calves Four to Ten Days Old.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Dehorning cattle is almost universally practiced by stockmen who raise high-grade steers. Cattle without horns are easier to handle, have an equal chance at the feed trough when placed in the feed lots, are less dangerous to attendants, and are more uniform in appearance. Also, they cannot gore one another in the feed lot or in transit to market, which causes greater shrinkage in weight, injures the skin for commercial purposes, and leaves the flesh in a bruised condition, thus detracting from its value.

While there are many cruel ways of performing this operation, one of the simplest and easiest methods is to use caustic, either soda or potash, on the undeveloped horns of the calves. To obtain the best results, the caustic should be applied when the calf is from four to ten days old. Clip the hair from around the knobs where the horns are developing. With a slightly moistened stick of caustic, rub each horn alternately three or four times, allowing it to dry each time before applying the next. Extreme care should be taken not to have the stick so wet that the solution from it will run down the side of the calf's head. To prevent the spread of the caustic, which will cause sores on the skin, apply vasoline around the edge where the hair has been clipped.

For older cattle, where the horns have developed, either saws or clippers should be used. It is best to use the clipper on the young animals when the horns are still soft and tender, but with older animals which have hard, brittle horns the saw should be used. While the operation can be performed with clippers quicker and with less pain, this instrument is liable to crush the bone in older animals, causing a wound that heals very slowly.

Cattle should never be dehorned during warm weather, spring being the best time to perform the operation. If delayed too long in the season, the wound may become infested with screw worms, and flies are very annoying. Either coal tar or pine tar applied to the wound will prevent fly injury. If screw worms appear in spite of all precautions, they may be removed by saturating a piece of absorbent cotton in chloroform and inserting it into the wound, or by pouring gasoline into the horn cavities. This kills the worms, which should then be removed with a pair of forceps.

In order to make a clean cut and avoid trouble in performing the operation, the animal's head should be clapped or held in a firm position. For this purpose dehorning chutes, the front of which consists of two strong pieces which can be closed firmly on either side of the cow's neck, are very convenient.

COMFORTABLE PEN FOR HOGS

Always Provide Dry Sleeping Quarters With Small Air Space Above Nest—Give Exercise.

Always give the pigs a dry place in which to sleep. Do not allow much air space above the nest. Give an opportunity for an abundance of exercise and a variety of feed. It is practicable to push them to popular market weights by the time they are seven months of age. The gains are made more cheaply before that time than it is possible to make them after that age.

JELLIED FISH.

(Official Recipes.)

Mix one and one-half cupsful of soaked fish with two tablespoonfuls chopped capers. Chopped celery and hard-boiled eggs may be added. Soak one tablespoonful gelatine in two tablespoonfuls cold water. When the gelatine is dissolved, mix it with one cupful boiling water. Add two tablespoonfuls lemon juice and seasoning of salt and pepper. Stir in the fish mixture, pour in a chilled mold, and set in a cool place to harden. Cut in slices, and serve on lettuce leaves with mayonnaise dressing. The gelatine and the fish may be arranged in layers if the housekeeper has time to spend in preparing the dish.

CORN COMES INTO ITS OWN.
Corn, rightly used, will help materially to win the war; moreover, it is a real American product, and it ought to be our national dish. Not so many years ago corn and cornmeal formed the basis of only a few foods and dishes. Now corn is a breakfast cereal, the basis of nearly 100 sorts of bread and muffins; it's a sanger, a scrapp, a salad oil, a cooking oil, a dessert material and even a candy, and being such a distinctly American food it should rank with the Thanksgiving turkey and ice cream in our affections.

Among our French, Belgian and Italian allies and allies are rightly regarded as a necessity. She is a poor housewife who looks upon them as

DO NOT RESTRICT PUBLIC INFORMATION.

Without wishing to be other than constructively critical, The Star believes that the government should go very slow in all measures which might have a tendency to restrict the dissemination of that information that is calculated to further progress of the government in this war. For one thing the proposed tax on leased wires over which news is carried into newspaper offices, while it may increase revenues of the Government, at the same time it is bound to operate against the very purpose for which the United States is spending more than a million dollars a year in the maintenance of the Committee on Public Information. It will tend to decrease the number of small-town newspapers and it may be one of the several considerations to force the price of metropolitan papers up to such a price that many thousands of persons will be unable to buy papers with the regularity needed if the various propagandas are to be successfully carried out.

The newspapers and magazines (the latter being the medium through which much propaganda work is being done that could not well be done by daily newspapers), like all other enterprises, are facing the grave problem of mounting costs. Many hundreds of small country newspapers, probably 1,500, have been forced to discontinue publication because of their inability to cope with the problem of costs. The price of many Sunday newspapers have mounted to as high as seven cents, and in a few cases to ten cents, and in many quarters it is predicted that it is only a question of time when the publishers generally will have to get ten cents a copy for Sunday papers or cease publishing them. Many daily papers have also been forced to increase prices. To saddle the greatest channel of public information with the weight of a heavy leased wire tax may prove a penny-wise and pound-foolish policy.

The passing of the zone circulation measure, hard as it hit the magazines, hit the county newspaper readers harder. The country people, in many communities, are now forced to depend on the papers of the nearest city for their information—information calculated to keep up the morale of the American people in this stressful time. If the price of the papers have to be increased by raised postal rates or other tax, this large portion of the population will be denied all chances of gaining information as to what should and must be done by citizens to aid in war work.

As matters stand now in the cities, the poorer classes—the very people who most of all need to be kept informed of what this country is doing—will also be deprived of their sources of information, unless they can pay two, three or even five cents a copy, for if costs continue to mount, prices also will go up. Our advice to the government is not to choke the channels of intelligence, but by removing restrictive measures make it easy for the public to learn what is happening.—From Baltimore Star, Saturday, August 10, 1918.

Belief That Seems Commonly Accepted is Incorrect, According to Writer in Boy Scouts' Magazine.

Some people seem to think that because rabbits' ears are so long it is a good reason to use them as a handle, says Harry Bradford in Boy's Life, the Boy Scouts' magazine. They have told me that "the mother rabbit carries her young around by the ears!"

I have had a pretty good opportunity to observe such a feat, but I have never seen such a performance. It is all right to hold them by the ears, but I always put my hand or arm under their hind legs to lift them up, and then I know I am not hurting them.

One peculiarity I have always noticed about rabbits is their apparent lack of clear vision. If you will notice their eyes, you will see that they are always, if ever, move the eyeball to look up or down or at either side, as they look down. You can't tell when they are looking directly at you as you can with a cat.

If you throw a carrot to them, they will look at it and go directly to it, but they will not look at you as you throw it.

PROCLAMATION

Proposing an Amendment to the Constitution of the State, Providing For Absent Voting.

Whereas, at the January session of the General Assembly of Maryland, held in the year 1918, a Bill was passed, to wit: Chapter 20 of said Acts, proposing an additional section to Article 1 of the Constitution of Maryland, to be known as Section 1A, and relating to Absent Voting, and which said Bill is in the words and figures following:

CHAPTER 20
An Act to propose an amendment to Article 1, title, "Elective Franchise," of the Constitution of the State of Maryland, by adding a new section thereto, to be known as Section 1A, the same relating to absent voting; and to provide for the submission of said amendment to the qualified voters of this State for adoption or rejection.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, three-fifths of all the members of each of the two Houses concurring, That the following new Section be and the same is hereby proposed as an Amendment to Article 1, title, "Elective Franchise," of the Constitution of the State of Maryland, to be known as Section 1A, and to be known as Section 1A; the same, if adopted by the legally qualified voters of the State as herein provided, to become a part of Article 1 of the Constitution of Maryland.

Section 1A. The General Assembly of Maryland shall have power to provide by suitable enactment for voting by qualified voters of the State of Maryland who are absent and engaged in the military or naval service of the United States at the time of election in which they are entitled to vote, and for the manner in which the time and place at which such absent voter may vote and for the canvass and return of their votes.

Section 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That said foregoing Section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, shall be at the next General Election for Members of Congress held in this State submitted to the legal and qualified voters of the State for adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the directions contained in Article XIV of the Constitution of this State, and at the said General Election the vote on the said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be printed the words "For the Constitutional Amendment" and "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as now provided by law, and immediately after election the returns shall be made to the Governor of the vote for and against said proposed amendment as directed by said fourteenth Article of the Constitution, and further proceedings had in accordance with said Article Fourteen.

Approved March 25, 1918.
Now, therefore, I, Emerson C. Harrington, Governor of the State of Maryland, in pursuance of the direction contained in Section 1 of Article 1 of the Constitution of Maryland do hereby order and direct that this Proclamation, containing a full, true and correct copy of the text of said Chapter 20 of the Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland, Session of 1918, be published in at least two newspapers in each of the counties of the State where so many may be published, and where not more than one may be published, then in that newspaper, and in three newspapers published in the City of Baltimore, one of which shall be in the German language, once a week for at least three months next preceding the election to be held in the State of Maryland on Tuesday, November 5, 1918, at which election the said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be submitted in form and manner prescribed by the General Assembly, to the legal and qualified voters of the State for their adoption or rejection.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of the State of Maryland, Done at the City of Annapolis, this twentieth day of July, 1918.
Emerson C. Harrington, Governor.

TWO POUNDS OF SUGAR.

A teaspoonful of sugar per meal is a little less than the amount which Marylanders are entitled to use between August 1st and such time as the present emergency is over. In private houses the allowance is two pounds per person per month, as against three pounds formerly. In public eating places the allowance is two pounds for every ninety meals served.

One pound of sugar contains 60 teaspoonfuls.

A teaspoonful of sugar contains about one-third of an ounce of sugar. A German shell doesn't contain any.

ANNE AVERTED A CRIME

By Marrying the Only Man She Loved.

By A. MARIA CRAWFORD.

His weekly letter, due on Thursday morning, was not at her plate when she came down to breakfast. She ran through her mail hurriedly, an unpleasant suspicion chilling her heart. "What does Tom write? Is it time for one of those—those roundups he told us about when he was here?" "I don't know, mother. There's no letter from him this morning."

"The poor boy must be ill. I'll have your father telegraph at once."

"I would rather you wouldn't do that—not just yet. The mail may be late."

"Late? It is a strange thing that it has never been late before, in three or four years. I think of Tom Marshall as one of my own children. His mother was my best friend, and she would appreciate my interest if she were alive today."

"Not when you have a marriageable daughter," said Anne smiling. In the privacy of her own room, an hour later, she read again his last letter.

"If you don't object, Anne," it ran, "I would like to read bits of your letter dated the twentieth to a little girl out here. She is a pretty little thing and often helps me pass away time. Your letters are gems, fragrant with my old life, and I would like her to hear a part of the one I mentioned."

Anne looked up over her desk where his picture had hung ever since she came home from school. He had been a student in the great university near her own college. When he was graduated he had gone west to a ranch owned by his father. He was determined to make good in the world as a man.

"I want to be a man's man, Anne," he had told her, "not a weakling. I don't want to stay in the east and be pushed by dad's friends and have to frequent pink teas and dinner parties. I am going to get away from the people who know me so that I will be forced to stand or fall on my own resources."

He had found the west, robbed of its glamour of romance and adventure, to be the very place to test his strength and ability. Discouraged many times, yet always manfully brave, he succeeded in carving out a future for himself as he had dreamed.

"No," She Said Quietly.

Weeks went by, then months, and still Anne had no word from him. She had answered his last letter promptly assuring him of no objection in case he still cared to read parts of her letter to a stranger. Months added to months made a year of silence. Then Anne went away with her mother to the mountains. A few days after she left home her father telegraphed her that Tom Marshall had appeared and wanted to see her.

"Don't tell where we are," she answered, and settled down to enjoy the courtship of Standfield Meyers, who had followed her to the mountains and who offered balm for her wounded pride.

One evening as she swayed with young Meyers to the music in the ballroom of the hotel she saw Tom Marshall standing in the entrance. His eyes fixed on her. She nodded pleasantly, much as she would have done to any casual acquaintance. The music stopped when she was near the door across the room. She hurried into the darkness, and pleading a headache to her partner, went directly down the long veranda, through a French window and so gained the elevator without encountering Marshall. A night's rest, she reflected, would fit her for the ordeal of meeting his wife. Her father's letter that day stated that Marshall had with him a beautiful young woman whom he had heard called Mrs. Marshall.

Anne was conscious of the gossip over the bridge tables and embroidered ruffles as she started out for a tramp with Meyers the next morning. The engagement of the two would be announced at the beginning of the season in town, the marriage to take place the following spring, so one declared. Anne was glad that such a story was abroad. Marshall would be sure to hear it and so realize how little she really cared for him. Later

During November, the United States mints coined 77,000,000 pennies, 18,000,000 dimes and 11,000,000 nickels to meet the holiday trade demand.

Last year there were 180 strikes in Japan, involving 30,000 workers, compared with 80 strikes involving 9,000 workers in the year before.

down by Deep Rock springs, Standfield Meyers demanded his final answer.

"Leave me alone now," she urged. "I want to think it over before I answer you positively."

And so it was that she sat there, chin in hand, elbow on knee, looking out across the valley basking in the sunlight, Marshall came upon her. She could not quite keep the gladness out of her eyes as she looked up and saw him, stalwart and strong, with his youthful dreams still in his brown eyes.

"It is great to be back in the mountains, Anne. You look today just as you did that morning up at old Chester when I went to stammer goodbye to you. I was such a kid. Remember?"

Anne tossed the petals of a wild rose on the clear little stream that flowed from Deep Rock.

"No," she said, quietly. "That was a long time ago."

"What's the matter with your memory, Anne? You've changed. I couldn't sleep last night for thinking that you left the ballroom after seeing me without coming to welcome me. You meant home to me. That's why I followed you to the mountains."

"You don't know how hard it is to speak to anybody when Standfield is around."

"Standfield Meyers? What has he to do with your attitude to your old friends?"

"I am going to marry him," Anne wondered why her voice did not quiver with her heart.

Without a word he turned and started down the path.

"Tom," questioned Anne, a tiny pulse hammering in her throat, "Tom, won't you wish me joy?"

He came back then, his hand out, the old brave smile of his youth lighting his face.

"I was a beast, Anne, dear. Of course I wish you joy. It knocked me over a bit to hear the news. I was selfish, thinking only of my own loss. You see, I have always—foolishly, of course—believed that you were mine. It has never occurred to me that any man could take you away from me."

"Oh," cried Anne, "you mustn't talk to me like that. What would your wife think if she heard?"

"My what?"

"Your wife. You wrote me about a girl you said was very pretty. You wanted to read one of my letters to her, and when you didn't answer my letter—"

"Didn't answer? I wrote to you four or five times while I was hurt."

"Hurt?" cried Anne, in alarm. "Oh, Tom, how?"

"Pony bucked with me and I unfortunately got mixed up with a machine that happened to be passing. The boys hurried me off to St. Joseph's hospital, where they patched up one shoulder and an arm until they are as good as new."

All the mother's solicitude deep in the heart of every woman for the only man, although he may be her senior by many years, showed in Anne's eager, tender questioning.

"Why didn't you let me know, Tom? Mother and I would have gone to you. Haven't you always known that I would do anything for you?"

"All but the greatest thing, Anne, the giving of yourself."

"Aren't you married, Tom?"

"No, I never wanted any woman but you. My brother and his wife met me and came on to meet you, but you had gone. I absolutely held your father up and demanded to know where you were."

"I haven't answered Standfield yet, Tom. It would be a crime to marry anybody but you. My pride was hurt—"

"You'll have to marry me now, today," said Marshall, his arms about her. "Then we'll go west and shoot up the town until I find out what became of our letters."

"All's well that ends well," laughed the girl happily, while a mocking bird broke into a melody of silver song somewhere in the young green branches overhead.

Professional Instinct.

Some of the newspaper correspondents have to work without pause at conventions, grinding out interminable strings of copy for transmission by telegraph. On such occasions it is not uncommon for four or five who are friendly to each other to form combinations and exchange reports. The simplest way to do this is to have each writer make carbon copies of his day's work. Five weary correspondents were occupying one room in Michigan avenue, and four of them had keeled out on beds, while the fifth continued to pound his mill. "What are you writing?" asked one of them after a while. "A letter to my wife." "Give us carbons," yelled the four in chorus.—The Argonaut.

Banana Flour.

Banana flour, especially prepared as a tonic food is making its appearance in Paris under the name of bananeine. It is to be remarked that within a recent period this fruit was but little used in France, and even now its consumption is limited. However, measures are being taken to increase the importation, and it is said that 70 vessels were recently fitted up for bringing the fruit to Europe. Banana flour has a much more extended use in England than on the continent, but efforts are now made to introduce it in France, owing to its great nutritive value. The bananeine is a preparation 80 per cent. of banana flour, this being put through a sterilizing process at the proper heat.

The G & J Cord Tire

"The Name Behind the Tire"

All tires are bought by name. You do not say to your dealer: "Give me a 34x4 tire." You say: "Give me a G & J 34x4." You ask for a certain tire by name because of what the name represents in your mind.

If you have had G & J Tires or know another motorist who has tried them, you are certain to ask for G & J because you know that "The Name Behind the Tire" stands for exceptional quality. G & J has had that reputation for more than a quarter of a century. It is the oldest and best-known name in the tire field. And G & J Tires have always had the stuff in them to increase the reputation of the name.

The G & J Cord Tire is the finest example of cord tire construction on the market. It cannot be surpassed. G & J Tires may be had also in the famous "G" Tread, the "Stalwart" and "Plain."

Orchard Information

SELECT AND PLANT PEACHES

Only Thrifty, Well-Grown Trees, Free From Pests and Diseases, Should Be Used.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

It is poor economy to buy cheap peach trees. First-grade trees cost but a few cents more than the other grades and the thrifty, rapid growth which they make offsets many times this additional expense, but even the best trees must be properly planted in order to be successful. This article tells how to select and plant the trees.

As a rule, only thrifty, well-grown well-rooted one-year-old or "June-budded" trees free from injurious insect pests and fungous diseases should be planted. Thrifty, well-grown trees are not necessarily the largest trees which can be found in a nursery. Medium-sized trees are probably fully as desirable for planting as the larger ones, but the smaller grades in some cases may be made up of trees that are stunted and weak from some cause or other. Not infrequently they have poor root systems. The smaller trees can usually be bought at a lower price than the medium-sized and large ones but they may prove costly in the end, especially if they are lacking in vitality and make a poor growth after being planted.

Peach trees are commonly graded according to their height. In properly grown trees, however, there is a pretty definite relation between the height and the size of the trunk or "caliper" of the tree. The diameter of the stem is sometimes used as the basis for grading nursery stock. A few cents per tree of additional cost means comparatively little in the initial expense of starting an orchard, but it may mean a vast sum later in the life of the orchard in the better development of good, vigorous trees.

When received from the nursery the trees should be unpacked immediately. Every possible precaution should be taken to prevent the roots from becoming dry. Unless the trees can be planted immediately, they should be heeled in, in a thoroughly well-drained place, where the soil is mellow and deep. A trench sufficiently wide and deep to receive the roots is made; then the trees are placed in it. In covering, the soil should be worked around the roots of the trees sufficient-

Horticultural Advice

ANNUAL PRUNING OF TREES

Work Should Be as Overt as Necessary to Induce Development of New Wood.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

As the fruit of the peach is borne on wood which grew the previous year, it is desirable to prune each season as soon as it is possible to determine to what extent, if any, the fruit buds have been damaged by freezing.

The annual pruning of peach trees should be done, but the extent of the pruning will be determined by the growth made by the trees the previous year and the extent to which the buds have been injured by cold during the winter.

The trees should be pruned as severely as is necessary to induce the development of new wood for next year's fruiting. If 50 per cent of the fruit buds have been killed, the pruning should be much less severe than would be the case had no fruit buds been destroyed, as pruning is one of the means of thinning the crop on the trees. The pruning therefore is little or much in proportion to the percentage of fruit buds destroyed. Little wood should be cut away if 50 per cent or more of the fruit buds are destroyed and one-half of the previous season's growth cut away if no injury has been suffered by the fruit buds.

All dead wood should be cut out of raspberry and blackberry bushes. Grape vines should be pruned. No fear need be felt if the vines bleed profusely, as no injury will be done.

SPRAY FOR POWDER MILDEW

Applications of Lime-Sulphur Effective Remedy for Serious Fungous Diseases.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Powdery mildew, the most serious fungous disease occurring on apples in the irrigated orchards of the Northwest and sometimes causing considerable damage in semiarid regions farther east and south, can be controlled by thorough spraying. Lime-sulphur diluted 1 to 50 is the spray to use.

A serious attack of this mildew often results in a crop reduction the following year of more than 50 per cent, and it also causes a dwarfing and a russeting of the fruit which greatly reduces its market value.

The first application of the spray should be made when the cluster buds have separated but before blossoms have opened; the second when most of the blossoms have fallen and before the calyx has closed. In the second application the lime-sulphur should be combined with the arsenate of lead used for controlling moth. It has been thoroughly demonstrated that there are no harmful effects from such a combination of sprays and it is a great saving of time to make the two treatments in one application.

The treatment just described usually is sufficient to hold the disease in check, but in case of severe infection another spray may be necessary three or four weeks after the calyx spray and possibly still others at intervals of four weeks. In these later applications lime-sulphur cannot be used in these regions of intense sunlight without severe spray injury. Bordeaux is unsatisfactory as a substitute, for the almost entire absence of summer rainfall it remains as a heavy coating on the fruit and prevents it from coloring properly. Experiments have shown that ammoniacal copper carbonate is a satisfactory substitute for lime-sulphur in these later applications, competing the control of the disease without harmful effects.

Powdery mildew attacks the buds, twigs, foliage, fruit and sometimes the blossoms of the apple. The affected leaves become somewhat curled and narrowed and have whitish felt-like appearance. The twig growth is checked and in some cases the twigs are killed. Fruit bud formation is partially prevented and such buds as form are of low vitality.

FARM ANIMALS

RATIONS FOR FARM ANIMALS

More Effective Use of By-Products of Crops Offers Opportunity for Meat Production.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The misuse of the by-products of farm crops is causing American farmers to lose millions of dollars annually. Nothing offers greater opportunity for increased and more economical production of farm meats and dairy products than by the more effective use of such products. To bring our farming operations up to the highest possible state of efficiency, all farm by-products must be used in an economical manner. Nearly all managers of the great industries of this country have learned that by-products constitute a very large source of their income and about all the profits. Farming is the greatest industry in this country to-day, but farm by-products have received very little attention from the average farmer. Now, however, conditions are such as to urge the conservation of every available farm resource and every American farmer must make a study of conditions existing on his own farm with the idea of utilizing such products as are now being wasted.

It is estimated that the total amount of corn stover and straws burned, plowed under, allowed to rot in stacks, and wasted in other ways is worth over $100,000,000. This is an appalling loss, and if these feedstuffs were used in the feeding of cattle, sheep, and horses it would result in greatly increased profits to individual farmers as well as tend to increase the supply of meat and dairy products.

The burning of straw, even though the ashes leave a small quantity of additional mineral matter in the soil, results in an almost total loss. It is practiced most largely in the west, mainly because of custom rather than inability to purchase, feed, or market meat-producing animals. The people there have come to believe that straw is of no value because in that section it has never been used for anything. In some of the western states a campaign has been made by the colleges of agriculture and institute workers to get farmers to use a portion of their waste straw for spreading over their grain fields.

It is needless to say that burning the stover is a great waste, although it seems to offer a quick and easy method of cleaning the ground preparatory to plowing. This system is most largely practiced where the corn is snapped, or husked, in the field, leaving the stalks standing.

Another great waste that can well be stopped is the failure to utilize the large area of grass along our roads, lanes, and fence rows. Sheep would utilize this waste and remove one of the greatest breeding places of injurious farm insects. The lower leaves of the corn plant, which usually go to waste, as well as the cut-over grain and hay fields, also offer considerable feed to farm flocks.

Practical experience as well as experimental work has taught that straw and stover can be used very economically in the rations of almost all kinds of live stock. These roughages are and should be used in the fattening rations of all farm animals except hogs, and should compose the larger part of all wintering or keeping rations for cattle, sheep, and horses. Breeding herds of beef cattle or dry dairy cows can be successfully kept on rations composed largely of these materials. Flocks of breeding ewes do well with such feeds when some grain is added. Horses doing very light or no work need little grain if given a plentiful allowance of clean, bright straw or stover. Under certain conditions, of course, grain should be added to the ration, but now it should be conserved as largely as possible for human consumption.

ENTRANCE EXAMINATIONS

STATE SCHOLARSHIPS IN ENGINEERING COURSES.

ENTRANCE EXAMINATIONS for the Department of Engineering, as well as for the College of Arts and Sciences, will be held in Gilman Hall, Homewood, Monday-Thursday, September 16-19, 1918, beginning at 9 A. M. each day.

APPLICATIONS FOR SCHOLARSHIPS IN THE DEPARTMENT OF ENGINEERING, established under the provisions of the Laws of Maryland, Chapter 90, 1912, will now be received. If there is more than one applicant for a particular scholarship, a competitive examination must be taken Friday, September 20, 1918, beginning at 9 A. M. Appointments will be made soon after.

Each Legislative District of Baltimore City and each County of the State, with the exception of Howard and Worcester Counties, will be entitled to one or more scholarships for the year 1918-1919, in addition to those which have already been assigned. In the two counties mentioned above, all the available scholarships have been awarded.

Under the provisions of the act of Assembly, the County and City Scholarships in the department of Engineering are awarded only to deserving students whose financial circumstances are such that they are unable to obtain an education in Engineering unless free tuition be granted to them. The scholarships entitle the holder to free tuition, free use of text-books, and exemption from all regular fees. One of the scholarships in each County and each Legislative District of the City carries also the sum of $200. The expense of attendance for those who do not receive scholarships is not greater than at other Maryland institutions.

Scholarships may be awarded to graduates of Loyola College, St. John's College, Washington College, Western Maryland College, Maryland Agricultural College, Mt. St. Mary's College, Rock Hill College.

Two scholarships will be awarded "At Large". Applicants should address The Registrar, The Johns Hopkins University, for blank forms of application and for further information as to examinations, award of scholarships, and courses of instruction. The session begins Tuesday, October 1st.

By LIEUTENANT PAT O'BRIEN.

was now passing I realized that I must be in the outskirts of the big city which the Hun had mentioned and where I was to procure a passport.

Village after village I passed, and although I tried to skirt them wherever possible I realized that I would never make much progress if I continued that course. To gain a mile I would sometimes have to make a detour of two or three. I decided that I would try my luck in going straight through the next village I came to.

As I approached it, I passed numbers of peasants who were ambling along the road. I was afraid to mingle with them because it was impossible for one to talk to them and it was dangerous to arouse suspicion even among the Belgians. For all I knew, one of them might be treacherous enough to deliver me to the Germans in return for the reward he might be sure of receiving.

About 9 o'clock that evening I came to a point where ahead of me on the right was a Belgian police station—I knew it from its red lights—and on the other side of the street were two German soldiers in uniform leaning against a bicycle.

Here was a problem which called for instant decision; if I turned back the suspicion of the soldiers would be instantly aroused and if I crossed the road so as not to pass so closely to them they might be equally suspicious. I decided to march bravely by the Huns, bluff my way through and trust to Providence. If anybody imagines, however, that I was at all comfortable as I approached these soldiers, he must think I am a much braver man than I claim to be. My heart beat so loud I was afraid they would hear it. Every step I took brought me so much nearer to what might prove to be the end of all my hopes. It was a nerve-racking ordeal.

I was now within a few feet of them. Another step and— They didn't turn a hair! I passed right by them—heard what they were saying, although, of course, I didn't understand it, and went right on.

I can't say I didn't walk a little faster as I left them behind, but I tried to maintain an even gait so as not to give them any idea of the forward exhilaration I was experiencing. No words can explain, however, how relieved I really felt to know that I had successfully passed through the first of a series of similar tests which I realized were in store for me—although I did not know then how soon I was to be confronted with the second.

As it was, however, the incident gave me a world of confidence. It demonstrated to me that there was nothing in my appearance at any rate to attract the attention of the German soldiers. Apparently I looked like a Belgian peasant, and it could only work things so that I would never have to answer questions and thus give away my nationality. I figured I would be tolerably safe.

As I marched along I felt so happy I couldn't help humming an air of one of the new patriotic songs that we used to sing at the air-drome back in Ypres.

In this happy frame of mind I covered the next three miles in about an hour and then came to another little village. My usual course would have been to go around it—through fields, back yards, woods or whatever else lay in my way—but I had gained so much time by going through the last village instead of detouring around it and my appearance seemed to be so unobtrusive that I decided to try the same stunt again.

I stopped humming and kept very much on the alert, but apart from that, I walked boldly through the main street without any feeling of alarm.

I had proceeded perhaps a mile along the main street when I noticed ahead of me three German soldiers standing at the curb.

Again my heart started to beat fast. I must confess, but I was not nearly so scared as I had been an hour or so before.

I walked ahead, determined to follow my previous procedure in every particular.

I had got to about fifteen feet away from the soldiers when one of them stepped onto the sidewalk and shouted: "Halt!"

My heart stopped beating fast—for a moment, I believe, it stopped beating altogether! I can't attempt to describe my feelings. I thought that the jig was up—that all I had gone through and all I had escaped would now avail me nothing, mingled with the feeling of disgust with myself because of the foolish risk I had taken in going through the village, combined to take all the starch out of me, and I could feel that witling as the soldier advanced to the spot where I stood rooted in my tracks.

I had a bottle of water in one pocket and a piece of bread in the other, and as the Hun advanced to search me I held the bottle up in one hand and the piece of bread in the other so that he could see that was all I had.

It occurred to me that he would "frisk" me—that is, feel me over for arms or other weapons, then place me under arrest and march me off to the guardhouse. I had not the slightest idea but that I was captured and there didn't seem to be much use in resisting, unarmed as I was and with two other German soldiers within a few feet of me.

Like a flash it suddenly dawned on me, however, that for all this soldier could have known I was only a Belgian peasant and that his object in searching me, which he proceeded to do, was to ascertain whether I had committed the common "crime" of smuggling potatoes.

The Belgians were allowed only a certain amount of potatoes, and it is against the laws laid down by the Huns to deal in vegetables of any kind except under the rigid supervision of the authorities. Nevertheless, it was one of the principal vocations of the average poor Belgian to buy potatoes out in the country from peasants and then smuggle them into the large cities and sell them clandestinely at a high price.

To stop this traffic in potatoes, the German soldiers were in the habit of subjecting the Belgians to frequent search, and I was being held up by this soldier for no other reason than that he thought I might be a potato smuggler!

He felt of my outside clothes and pockets, and finding no potatoes seemed to be quite satisfied. Had he but known who I was he could have earned an iron cross! Or, perhaps, in view of the fact that I had a heavy water bottle in my uplifted hand, it might have turned out to be a wooden cross!

He said something in German, which, of course, I did not understand, and then some Belgian peasants came along and seemed to distract his attention. Perhaps he had said: "It's all right; you may go on," or he may have been talking to the others in Flemish, but at any rate, observing that he was more interested in the others than I was in me at the moment, I put the bottle in my pocket and walked on.

After I walked a few steps, I took a furtive glance backward and noticed the soldier who had searched me rejoin his comrades at the curb and then stop another fellow who had come along, and then I disappeared in the darkness.

I cannot say that the outcome of this adventure left me in the same confident frame of mind that followed the earlier one. I was sure I had come out of it all right, but I could not help thinking what a terribly close shave I had.

Suppose the soldier had questioned me! The ruse I had been following in my dealings with the Belgian peasants—pretending I was deaf and dumb—might possibly have worked here, too, but a soldier—a German soldier—might not so easily have been fooled. It was more than an even chance that it would have at least aroused his suspicion and resulted in further investigation. A search of my clothing would have revealed a dozen things which would have established my identity and all my shaming of deafness would have availed me nothing.

As I wandered along I knew that I was now approaching the big city which my Belgian friend had spoken of and which I would have to enter if I was to get the passport, and I realized now how essential it was to have something to enable me to get through the frequent examinations to which I expected to be subjected.

While I was still debating in my mind whether it was going to be possible for me to enter the city that night, I saw in the distance what appeared to be an arc light, and as I neared it that was what it turned out to be. Beneath the light I could make out the forms of three guards, and the thought of having to go through the same kind of ordeal that I had just experienced filled me with misgivings. Was it possible that I could be fortunate enough to get by again?

As I slowed up a little, trying to make up my mind what was best to do, I was overtaken by a group of Belgian women who were shuffling along the road, and I decided to mingle with them and see if I couldn't convey the impression that I was one of their party.

figures of those three soldiers with their spiked helmets loomed before like a regiment. I felt as if I were walking right into the jaws of death. Rather than go through what was in store for me, I felt that I would infinitely prefer to be fighting again in the air with those four desperate Huns who had been the cause of my present plight—then, at least, I would have a chance to fight back, but now I had to risk my life and take what was coming to me without a chance to strike a blow in my own defense.

I shall never forget my feelings as we came within the shaft of light projected by that great arc light nor the faces of those three guards as we passed by them. I didn't look directly at them, but out of the corner of my eye I never missed a detail. I held a handkerchief up to my face as we passed them and endeavored to imitate the slouching gait of the Belgians as well as I could, and apparently it worked. We walked right by those guards and they paid absolutely no attention to us.

If ever a fellow felt like going down on his knees and praying I did at that moment, but it wouldn't have done to show my elation or gratitude in that conspicuous way.

It was then well after 11 o'clock and I knew it would be unsafe for me to attempt to find a lodging place in the city, and the only thing for me to do was to locate the man whose name the Belgian had given me. He had given me a good description of the street and had directed me how to get there, and I followed his instructions closely.

After walking the streets for about half an hour, I came upon one of the landmarks my friend had described to me and ten minutes afterwards I was knocking at the door of the man who was to make it possible to reach Holland—and liberty!—at last, that was what I hoped.

CHAPTER XII.

The Forged Passport.

For obvious reasons, I cannot describe the man to whom I applied for the passport nor the house in which he lived. While, in view of what subsequently happened, I would not be very much concerned if he got into trouble for having dealt with me, I realize that the hardships he had endured in common with the other inhabitants of that conquered city may possibly have distorted his idea of right and justice, and I shall not deliberately bring further disaster on him by revealing his identity.

This man—we will call him Huylliger because that is as unlike his name as it is mine—was very kind to me on that memorable night when I aroused him from his sleep and in a few words of explanation told him of my plight.

He invited me inside, prepared some food for me and, putting on a dressing gown, came and sat by me while I ate, listening with the greatest interest to the short account of my adventures.

He could speak English fluently, and he interrupted me several times to express his sympathy for the sufferings I had endured.

"O'Brien," he said, after I had concluded my story, "I am going to help you. It may take several days—perhaps as long as two weeks—but eventually we will provide the means to enable you to get to Holland."

I thanked him a thousand times and told him that I didn't know how I could possibly repay him.

"Don't think of that," he replied; "the satisfaction of knowing that I have aided in placing one more victim of the Huns beyond their power to harm will more than repay me for all the risk I shall run in helping you. You'd better turn in now, O'Brien, and in the morning I'll tell you what I plan to do."

As I removed my clothes and noticed that my knees were still swollen to twice their normal size, that my left ankle was black and blue from the wrench I had given it when I jumped from the train and that my ribs showed through my skin, I realized what a lot I had been through. As a matter of fact, I could not have weighed more than one hundred and fifty pounds at that time and I had tipped the scales at

LECTURES AT TENT CLOSED SUNDAY

"Sun Worship, Ancient and Modern," Subject Sunday Evening.

The series of Bible lectures which evangelist Andross has been conducting in the tent on Division Street closed Sunday evening last. The tent was taken down Monday and is being shipped to Baltimore, where the Seventh Day Adventists are to hold their camp meeting September 5-15. The tent is to be pitched in what was formerly called Electric Park.

Mr. Andross' lecture Sunday night on "Sun Worship, Ancient and Modern," was of exceptional interest, and was illustrated throughout with stereoscopic pictures. Practically every chair was occupied and a number of people stood outside the tent. The speaker said in part:

"The worship of the sun was the most ancient and universal form of heathenism. The Egyptians, Babylonians, Syrians, Phoenicians, and Carthaginians, etc. were all sun worshippers. Temples for the worship of the sun were built even in Rome. The historian Gibbon says that the Roman Emperors, Elagabalus, Aurelian, and Constantine, all worshipped the sun. We find relics of sun worship in Peru, the island of Titicaca, and among the Amazon Indians, etc. Even in our own country at the present time sun worshippers are carrying on their propaganda. Dr. O. Zar-Adusht Hamish, Chicago, has been publicly announced as the head of the cult, and 'Her Blessedness' Mrs. Hilton, Lowell, Mass., the high priestess.

"God warned the ancient Hebrews against worshipping 'either the sun or moon or any of the host of heaven' (Deut. 17:2-4), yet time and again they forsook the worship of Jehovah and 'went and served Baal'—the sun god. In the various forms of heathen sun worship there were sun-houses, sun-gates, sun-horses, sun-chariots, and sun-images. God so detested sun worship in any form that He even forbade His people facing the east—the sun-rising—when they worshipped. (Read Exe. 8:5-16). This custom of worshipping towards the east was so universal that it crept into the early Christian church along with other heathen practices. Even today the Mohammedans worship with their faces toward the sun-rising on their prophet's birthday.

"But there is a prominent relic of the heathen sun worship which still persists in the Christian Church today. It is the custom of SUN-DAY worship. Webster defines 'Sunday' thus: 'The first day of the week. So called because the day was anciently dedicated to the sun or to its worship.' Hiccox, D. D. (Author of 'Manual') said in an address to a Baptist Ministers' New York City, 'But what is (Sunday) comes brand-new from the east, from the sun-worshipers of the East.'

FRANCE DECORATES GALLANT YANKEE

Lieutenant Caygill, With One Man, Wiped Out Machine Gun Nest.

(By the Associated Press.)

Mount Vernon, N. Y., Aug. 27.—It was for wiping out a machine gun nest near Virezy with the aid of only one man, and capturing two German officers and sixteen privates that Lieut. Harry W. Caygill, United States Army, was made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor at the decoration ceremony in France Sunday, according to word received by his parents here yesterday.

Lieutenant Caygill was unable to receive in person the highest decoration that the French can offer an ally, for he is confined to the American hospital in Paris. He had just recovered from a wound after 55 days in a hospital when he performed the exploit for which he was decorated. Passing through that fray unharmed, he was wounded and gassed two days later.

Graduated from Columbia in 1917, Lieutenant Caygill, who is 23 years old, attended the first Plattsburg camp and was commissioned a second lieutenant in the regular army. The day after he was assigned to an infantry regiment he left for France. His regiment soon went into action and he was made a first lieutenant for gallantry before he was first wounded.

a sacred legacy to Protestantism. There was and is a commandment to 'keep holy the Sabbath Day,' but that Sabbath was not Sunday. There is no Scriptural evidence of the change of the Sabbath institution from the seventh to the first day of the week. The Encyclopedia Britannica, article, Sunday, says: 'It was Constantine the Great who first made a law for the proper observance of SUN-DAY. But Constantine was a heathen sun worshipper at the time he issued this law—321 A. D. In fact the law read: 'Let all the judges and towns-people and the occupations of all trades, rest upon the VENERABLE DAY OF THE SUN.'

"The Roman Catholics boast of having introduced this pagan Sun-day into the Christian religion. Note their own words: 'She (the Catholic Church) took the pagan Sunday and made it the Christian Sunday.' * * * Thus the Pagan Sunday, dedicated to Balder, (Balder was one of the sun gods), became the Christian Sunday—Catholic World, March, 1874. Thus we see that Sunday sacredness has grown out of heathenism. Jesus said: 'Every plant which my heavenly father has not planted shall be rooted up.' Matt. 15:13. The Sabbath of the Lord is the seventh day of the week (Saturday) as is made plain in Luke 24:1-7.

MEETING OF MARYLAND PRESS ASSOCIATION

At Ocean City For Three Days This Week.

The mid-summer meeting of the Maryland Press Association was held at Ocean City this week and was one of the most pleasant in the history of the Association.

About 25 of the county papers were represented, and in addition to a large amount of important business considered the editors found time to enjoy many pleasant outings which had been arranged by the committee on entertainment.

Senator Orlando Harrison was the host to the editors on Monday. Starting out from Ocean City early Monday morning in automobiles, the visitors were shown through the extensive peach and apple orchards of Senator Harrison on his farm north of Berlin up to the Delaware line. Returning to Berlin about noon, the editors, were joined by Governor Emerson C. Harrington, who received a most cordial welcome from Senator Harrison and the editors. The entire party were guests of Senator Harrison at a splendid dinner served by Mine Host Harmonson of the Atlantic Hotel.

After dinner the editors and Governor Harrington, in automobiles drove to Snow Hill and Pocomoke City, again visiting the extensive peach and apple orchards of Senator Harrison enroute.

In Snow Hill and Pocomoke City stops were made and Governor Harrington and the editors had the pleasure of meeting many of the leading citizens.

The return trip to Ocean City was made about 6.30 o'clock and at 8 o'clock the association's banquet was served at the Atlantic Hotel. Addresses were made by Gov. Harrington, Senator Harrison, Mr. A. M. Brown, of Delaware, and by several of the editors, after which a business session was held.

Tuesday, the party were guests of Mr. Riddle, who owns the finest farm perhaps, in Worcester County, situated about two miles west of Ocean City. Mr. Riddle gave the editors a splendid trip down Sinepuxent Bay on his palatial yacht, entertaining them royally.

The editors left for their homes Tuesday afternoon, regretting that they had to leave such hospitality and warm-heartedness, as was accorded them by the good people of Worcester.

It is needless to say that the members of the Maryland Press Association will gladly embrace the opportunity to again visit Maryland's charming seaside resort next summer.

CHAUTAUQUA HERE

All The Entertainments And Lectures So Far A Great Treat.

Chautauqua is now with us bringing with it seven days of enjoyment and enlightenment—Aside from the refreshing pleasure it gives its value cannot be measured as a means of education. Dr. Rhimer's lectures alone are well worth the season's ticket. The first lecture on "Christ In Khaki," was so satisfying to his hearers, that they felt assured of great treats in store for the remaining days.

The Kerry Singers delighted large audiences with their Irish folk-lore, ballads songs etc. both afternoon and evening and many were loud in their praise, saying it was the best opening day since Salisbury had a Chautauqua.

Tuesday night the wonderful Dr. Geisel was here, words can't describe her. She just electrifies her audiences making them respond to the feelings of her big heart and soul, as it is said of her she is a perfect dynamo of power.

Thursday The Conrad Co., was equally good. Clayton Conrad with his Crayon Conceptions," is a full program in himself, and Mr. Visocchi is a master of the wonderful piano accordion and was a great favorite as was Miss Sanders the soprano.

At night Owen R. Lovejoy gave one of the most constructive lectures ever given on the Chautauqua platform: As General Secretary of National Child Labor Committee he has the well deserved title of Children's Statesman. Out of his wide knowledge of the subject he brought information on these questions that every one should know who is interested in child welfare.

The McDonough Co., was everything that it was represented to be both in the afternoon entertainment and the evening's Comedy. It was one laugh from start to finish.

The Juniors under Miss Flynn are making fine progress.

Some introductions were made Thursday night, not in the regular program, that of Capt. Kirah and the other members of the tent crew, when it was discovered they have talent among them, by some songs sung in a fine baritone by the Captain and a whistling act by another of the crew.

MOTORCYCLE ACCIDENT

Three Year Old Son Of Mr. Chas. Holloway.

Little William Holloway while running across the street in front of his grandfather's undertaking establishment last Tuesday was run over by a motorcycle.

He was very painfully injured having both bones of one leg broken, the other badly burned, and many cuts and bruises about the head.

Arthur Perdue, the cyclist, on seeing the child exercised all the care he could, but for some reason or other was unable to avoid a collision, and just as he reached the boy the motorcycle turned over on him, Dr. Wailes and Dr. Potter were called at once, and attended to the suffering little fellow. He is now doing well and, like the ills of childhood, they are soon forgotten when the pain is gone, and now he cheerfully whistles away at times during his confinement.

NEW DRAFT MEASURE PASSES CONGRESS

All Must Register Between 18 And 45 Registration Day In September.

The Senate and House conference committees agreed upon the new man power bill this week, and the measure will be put into effect by the proclamation of the President. The date of registration will be set for an early date in September.

Most of the Amendments proposed were taken out of the bill, and as agreed upon the bill will be practically the one recommended by the War Department.

The Work or fight clause was eliminated on account of labor's opposition, and because the government already has the power to draft any man into service when he fails to continue in the work for which he was granted an exemption.

Senator France's amendment which would have given a badge to every man exempted for industrial reasons was omitted in the final bill, as was the amendment making it unnecessary for a registered man to claim exemption—After Provost Marshal General Crowder had explained that draft boards and not registrants must initiate deferred classification claims. Extended To Navy.

Senator Wadsworth's amendment extending the draft to the Navy and Marine Corps by providing that men may be allotted for those services was retained.

Modify Commission Feature.

A Senate provision retained in somewhat changed form removes the restrictions against commissioning and admitting to officers' training camps men under 21 years of age.

New regulations drawn by General Crowder but not yet approved by Secretary Baker, Senator Chamberlain explained, provide that district and not local boards shall have principal jurisdiction over the granting of different classifications, aided by a new advisory board composed of three members, one appointed respectively by the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of Agriculture and by the district board itself. The latter would advise the district board members regarding local economic conditions as applied to individual cases.

More Pay For Draft Boards.

Increased pay for the hard working local draft boards has been authorized by Provost Marshal General Crowder. Under an order announced, members of all boards will receive from $50 to $200 a month, the amount varying with the number of registrants on their rolls.

Fifty dollars will be the minimum for members of boards with 1000 registrants or less. Heretofore the compensation has been 10 cents for each registrant, which in many cases was a mere pittance and not in keeping with the time devoted to the task.

Officers at General Crowder's office said today the local board members have made real sacrifices to do their patriotic service, many of them having to give their entire time, and it has been realized that they were not properly compensated.

Mutiny Among Troops

Amsterdam, Aug. 27.—There are persistent rumors from a German source, says the frontier correspondent of the Telegraph, that a German battalion on being ordered to go, whereupon every tenth man was shot. The others then gave up their resistance.

ALLIES CONTINUE FORCING THE GERMAN HORDES BACK

SUNDAY PLEASURE RIDES IN AUTOMOBILES

Must Stop—To Conserve Gasoline Federal Fuel Administrator Acts.

This war is requiring a great deal of gasoline and the time has come when steps must be taken to conserve the supply so that no war industry will be crippled for the lack of it. The supply is not equal to the demand and the reserve store of gas is being already drawn upon.

Non-essentials are of course the first place to start in to save it in, and of these the use of gasoline in automobiles, motor cycles, launches etc. on Sunday for pleasure takes the first place. The Federal Fuel administrator has made a request that the use of gasoline for Sunday be done away with, by all living East of the Mississippi, except by transportation Companies, freight, doctors, undertakers, and certain necessary and essential things. The purpose evidently is to stop the Sunday riding for pleasure and pastime. A vigil of the leading automobile highways in the States east of the Mississippi river will be maintained next Sunday for the purpose of determining whether or not the American motorist responds to the patriotic appeal to suspend pleasure driving that day in order to conserve gasoline for war purposes, it was announced today by the Federal Fuel Administration.

Thousands of guards will be along these highways. These guards will count the number of cars that pass by. If the number is abnormally high, in view of the request for a suspension of pleasure driving, numbers of many of them will be taken to ascertain whether the trips were for pleasure or on business.

Whether or not the Federal Fuel Administration's request will be made a mandatory order will depend upon the number of motorists who do not heed the patriotic appeal. It was frankly intimated today at the Federal Fuel Administration's offices that if the motorists fail to respond to the appeal an order will be issued, forbidding the use of automobiles for pleasure purposes on Sundays and a penalty will be prescribed which will make the practice unprofitable and unpleasant to the man who violates the order.

To Save 7,600,000 Gallons.

Officials at the oil division of the Fuel Administration today estimated that if the request is rigidly obeyed an enormous saving of gasoline will be made on Sundays. Their estimate is 7,600,000 gallons. While this figure looks high, it is reached by estimating there are at least 3,600,000 passenger cars in the States east of the Mississippi river, and each one of these use on an average of two gallons a Sunday in pleasure driving.

It was also announced that the Fuel Administration is not altogether depending upon these highway patrols for a check on pleasure motoring. They are expecting patriotic citizens to aid in the work of keeping track of the "gasoline slackers." If a motorist is seen by a neighbor to be enjoying his usual Sunday joy-ride, the neighbor is expected to report the fact to the local fuel administrator. The Federal authorities also believe the force of public opinion will weigh heavily in bringing about a compliance with the order. A motorist who complies with the request will feel inclined to report the man who does not comply with it.

Drastic Action Expected.

Drastic action for the conservation of gasoline has been expected in many quarters in Washington for some time. When the Oil Division was created six months ago an appeal was issued to the American motorist to conserve the use of gasoline by taking every precaution to prevent leaks and to stop their motors when the car is not in use. This appeal has been largely ignored, and while the supply of gasoline is being maintained the enormous waste has kept pace.

Death Of Mrs. Hultz

Mrs. Mary E. Hultz died at the home of her daughter Mrs. Wm. Hastings on Locust Street, this week. She had reached her three score and ten being 72 years of age. Deceased had been twice married.

Four children survive: Messrs. Alpha and Charlie Brown of Salisbury. Mrs. Samuel Phipps, near Whitesville, and Mrs. Wm. Hastings of Salisbury.

The funeral was held at her late home by Rev. J. Taylor and Rev. J. H. Taylor.

GREATEST AND LONGEST OFFENSIVE SINCE BEGINNING OF WAR.

British, French and Americans delivered further smashes against the wobbly German line yesterday. The offensive is the greatest of the war on the western front since the Hun hordes swept thru Belgium and northern France in August, 1914.

The greatest advance yesterday was by the French, who have almost reached the railroad center of Ham. Noyon, long the German pivot to the south, fell to the French, and the Germans are now being squeezed out of the Noyon salient.

Americans with General Mangin's army north of Soissons, driving on the right flank of the crown prince's army, won successes at Juvigny.

The British have outflanked Peronne on the south, and Cambes will soon be in their hands. They have occupied Bapaume and several other towns in that sector.

BRITISH OUTFLANKING, TAKE MANY PLACES.

LONDON, Aug. 29, 5 P. M.—Bapaume was captured today by the forces of Field Marshal Haig.

Field Marshal Haig's men are reported to have taken Guinchy and Guillemont and to have reached the western outskirts of Maurepas. British patrols are said to be in Lesbœufs and Morval. These places are all south of Bapaume.

Immediately south of Bapaume the British have reached the Bapaume-Beaulencourt road. Advance troops are moving on Beaulencourt itself.

The British have also reached the high ground northeast of Gueudecourt and have nearly reached Le Transloy.

South of Peronne British forces today reached the eastern banks of the Somme river between Peronne and Haplincourt. Peronne has been outflanked from the south.

FRENCH TAKE NOYON, CLOSE IN UPON HAM; CAPTURE HUN TRAINS.

PARIS, Aug. 29, 3.50 P. M.—

French troops are at the gates of Ham, according to dispatches from the front. The Germans lost three complete munition trains at Breuil, on the Canal du Nord, five miles west of Ham, in their precipitate retreat.

Noyon has been occupied by the French.

Actual possession of the village of Ham probably will be delayed, as the retreating Germans leave all ruins saturated with poisonous gas.

At Champien Wood, Ercheu and other points in the line south of Neale, where the enemy sought to bar the French advance eastward, says Liberte, the German rearwards fought to the last man and refused to be captured.

The number of German prisoners captured by the French in their advance west of the Chaumes-Noyon line has been comparatively small, as the French have been obliged to move cautiously. The Germans left mines at various places and had scattered infernal machines and traps of various kinds. The war material taken, however, has been considerable.

120,000 Prisoners, 2000 Guns

LONDON, AUG. 29th, (By the Associated Press.)

The total entente allied captures on the western front since July 18 now approach 120,000 prisoners and 2000 guns. The British captured more than 21,000 prisoners between August 21 and August 26, while the British total losses in the same period, including all killed, wounded and missing, were only slightly in excess of that figure. A considerable proportion of the British casualties are in the slightly wounded class. The total captures by the British since August 8 exceed 47,000 officers and men and the captured guns number nearly 600.

Enemy Line Crumbling Along Vital Points; Retreat More Hurried.

(Associated Press War Summary.)

German forces in Southern Picardy are retreating over a wide front. After the capture of Roye by the French yesterday the German front has crumbled.

The lines which have held back the French and British for the last two weeks are giving way, and today's official reports show the French on a line less than three miles west of the Somme river and canal.

Thirty villages have been captured by the French in the advance which was started early Tuesday morning. Chaumes, the center of the German line between Roye and the Somme river, as it flows west through the battlefield, has been captured and many other vital points have been taken from the retreating enemy.

The Loving Heart

By VICTOR REDCLIFFE

(Copyright, 1918, Western Newspaper Union.)

"Oh, you wretch—you inhuman monster."

Striking her dainty hands against a rickety door, locked on the inside next to a window looking into a wretched room, Eunice Barbour flashed glances of indignation upon a ragged, unkempt old hag, who was slapping a forelock little mite of a girl not more than three years of age, as she dragged her across the floor. The beldame hastened her steps, frightened, and vanished. Eunice Barbour, a widow at twenty-two, and one of beauty's daughters, had come to the old tenement in quest of a seamstress she had once employed, but had found no trace. Now, overstrained, she stepped through the doorway of a room further on where a wholesome looking woman was bustling about.

"Please let me rest for a moment," pleaded Eunice, sinking to a chair. "I have been all upset from witnessing a mother mistreat her little one terribly. Oh, how can such cruel hearts exist! It reminded me of my dear little one who died a year ago," and the tears gathered in those gentle, yearning eyes.

"Do you mean the red faced, one-eyed woman at the end of the hall?" questioned her hostess. "Sure, it's not her child, that poor little thing. She's a farmed out one."

"What does that mean?" asked Eunice.

"Why, its father, a widower, left it with a Mrs. Dallas, who treated the child half decently. But she gave up the business and got the woman here to take the child at a low price."

"But its father?"

"He is in a traveling business and don't come back only once a year."

Eunice arose and left the house. As she penetrated a narrow passageway she paused suddenly. Seated upon a heap of dirt and caressing and chattering to the wreck of a rag doll was the little victim of abuse. She bore across one dirt soiled cheek a cruel blue mark, one eye was quite discolored. A daring impulse came to Eunice.

"Sweet darling!" she whispered, wrapping the auto cloak upon her arm around the child, "will you come with me?"

The tiny arms reached up and clasped about her neck, a seraphic smile illumined the woman's face. Eunice bore her swiftly to the street and to her waiting automobile.

"Home, quick!" she ordered the chauffeur, and within an hour they were safe in her pretty city flat.

Oh, the tender maternal love that sprang up within her lonely heart like some sweet flower!

Still, Eunice was haunted with the fear that a search might be made for the child and the little one taken away from her. At the end of a month she ventured to revisit the old tenement and seek the woman who soon told her all she knew of little Una's history.

"You need not worry, ma'am," she answered Eunice, when the latter had disclosed her share in the abduction. "That old hag is glad to get rid of her."

"But when the father returns—"

"Oh, she'll probably claim she died."

"Mrs. Drake," said Eunice, earnestly, placing some money on the table, "I want you to notify me at once should the father appear."

A new glory seemed to have come into her life. She had married a man she did not love, though she respected him. He had left her well provided for, but when their little child died Eunice felt as though existence was barren and motiveless.

She was quite agitated one day when the maid told of observing a stealthy figure peering in at the window the evening before. Then a new element came into her life. Her lawyer sent a gentleman named Roscoe Brooke. The avowed purpose of the visit of the latter was to negotiate with Mrs. Barbour for some land she owned in another state. He called several times on business. Then, as he seemed to enjoy her company and would spend half the evening with little Una on his lap, Eunice grew to cherish his company as a welcome panacea for her solitude.

He was at the flat one evening when there was a caller whom the maid and shown into another room. Eunice went thither, leaving the communicating door open. It was Mrs. Drake.

"I've come to tell you," she said, "I should have done it before, but I have been sick in bed for two weeks. The father of the little girl came inquiring for her and I told him about you—why, that's him now!"

Mrs. Drake had caught sight of the visitor through the open doorway. The truth flashed through the mind of Eunice at once. The father of Una had chosen to rejoin his child by forming an acquaintance with her "new mother." When Mrs. Drake had gone Eunice rejoined parent and child.

"I have learned who you are," she spoke tremulously. "You won't take my darling away from me, will you?"

"You have made her happy with your kindly interest," answered Roscoe Brooke. "It is in your power to bless my lonely life as well, Eunice," and his tones were earnest and pleading. "become to our cherished treasure a mother. Indeed."

DON'T LET UP.

It is true that our brave troops and those of our Allies have and are doing great work over in France. They have the Germans going back a great deal faster than they advanced; they have captured over one hundred thousand of them and hold these as prisoners; they have taken from the Hun vast amounts of ammunition and guns. But great as these things are and promising as they are to a final victory let us remember that the war is not yet over; let us remember that we must keep going as we have in the past and then go a little faster and harder because we have experience to guide us. The most dangerous thing for the Allies and ourselves to get into our head would be that the fight is won, and that it is no longer necessary to do our utmost to help win it.

Our soldiers over in France are doing their full part and they will do it no matter what the future may demand, and so we at home must continue to do our full share and instead of lessening our efforts increase them, and never let up until victory has been finally won and peace declared. We hope and trust and believe that the Hun will never again have the strength to regain the territory that he is now giving up, but we believe that the only way to make this a certainty is to keep up our war activities to full steam ahead, putting even more steam and power behind them than we have done in the past. Though we believe that Germany has reached and passed her zenith of power and is now on the down grade, she is still a powerful nation and it will take many a bloody fight yet before she gives up, and so we hammer and hammer on until the last battle is won and her military power be forever crushed. Don't let us get fooled and think it is over, but every man woman and child bend to his work with a new resolution to do his and her part clear up to the end.

BAD NEWS FOR BERLIN.

The war news from the eastern front these days is bad news for the German people. Quotations from German newspapers portray the gloom that overhangs the people in the large cities. That the people in the small towns and country are equally depressed is not to be doubted.

The Liberty Loan bond buyers of the preceding loans have their share in the success of the entente allies. They furnished the sinews of war not only to fight the U-boats and to build ships, not only to raise, equip, and send our soldiers over, not only to supply them and our allies with food and munitions, but more than $6,000,000,000 of their money has been loaned to our allies so that they may prosecute the war with vigor and strength.

We here at home have an opportunity to send the Germans some more bad news. The Germans have great respect for money; they know its vital value in waging war. They know, too, that the support the American people give a Government loan measures largely the support they give their Government, the moral as well as the financial support they give their armies in the field.

A tremendous subscription to the Fourth Liberty Loan will be as distressing to the German people as a defeat for them on the battle field, and it will mean as much. It spells their defeat; it breaks their morale; it means power to their enemies. A subscription to the loan is a contribution to German defeat and American victory.

WARNING AGAINST

Violating Violation Fees Except Directly To County Administrator, and County Administrators and all house-holders, boarding-house keepers, millers, and others of violating the Food Administration regulations and have collected some penalties.

No representative of the Food Administration, other than the County Administrator or his deputies in the Baltimore office, has any power to impose or recommend any penalty, and no money penalties are imposed either by County Administrators or by the Baltimore office excepting in the form of a voluntary contribution to some one of the war funds.

Any other person asking for money in the name of the Food Administration, is a fraud and should be immediately placed under arrest and turned over to the proper authorities. This office will make every effort to see that such an individual is put behind the bars, where he belongs.

All friends of the Food Administration are urged to give this statement the widest possible publicity.

PROCLAMATION

Proposing an Amendment to the Constitution of the State, Providing For Absent Voting.

Whereas, at the January session of the General Assembly of Maryland, held in the year 1918, a Bill was passed, to wit: Chapter 28 of said Acts, proposing an additional section to Article 1 of the Constitution of Maryland, to be known as Section 1A and relating to Absent Voting, and which said Bill in the words and figures following:

CHAPTER 28

An Act to propose an amendment to Article 1, title, "Elective Franchise," of the Constitution of the State of Maryland, by adding a new section thereto, to be known as Section 1A, the same relating to absent voting; and to provide for the submission of said amendment to the qualified voters of this State for adoption or rejection.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, three-fifths of all the members of each of the two Houses concurring, That the following new Section be and the same is hereby proposed as an Amendment to Article 1, title, "Elective Franchise," of the Constitution of the State of Maryland, to be inserted after Section 1, and to be known as Section 1A: the same, if adopted by the legally qualified voters of the State as herein provided, to become a part of Article 1 of the Constitution of Maryland.

Section 1A. The General Assembly of Maryland shall have power to provide by suitable enactment for voting by qualified voters of the State of Maryland who are absent and engaged in the Military or Naval Service of the United States at the time of any election from the ward or election district in which they are entitled to vote, and for the manner in which and the time and place at which such absent voter may vote, and for the canvass and return of their votes.

Section 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That said foregoing Section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, shall be at the next General Election for Members of Congress held in this State submitted to the legal and qualified voters of the State for adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the directions contained in Article XIV of the Constitution of this State, and at the said General Election the vote on the said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be printed the words "For the Constitutional Amendment" and "Against the Constitutional Amendment," now provided by law, and immediately after said election due returns shall be made to the Governor of the vote for and against said proposed amendment as directed by said Fourteenth Article of the Constitution, and further proceedings had in accordance with said Article Fourteen.

Approved March 22, 1918.
Now, therefore, I, Emerson C. Harrington, Governor of the State of Maryland, in pursuance of the direction contained in Section 1 of Article 14 of the Constitution of Maryland, hereby order and direct that this Proclamation, containing a full, true and correct copy of the text of said Chapter 28 of the Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland, Session of 1918, be published in at least two newspapers in each of the counties of the State where so many may be published, and where not more than one may be published, then in that newspaper, and in three newspapers published in the City of Baltimore, one of which shall be in the German language, once a week for at least three months next preceding the General Election to be held in the State of Maryland on Tuesday, November 1918, at which election the said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be submitted in form and manner prescribed by the General Assembly to the legal and qualified voters of the State for their adoption or rejection.

Works Like a Hoe

Covers 8 Acres A Day

It does as good work as you can do with a hoe—it cuts every weed—none can dodge it—Keeps the surface in condition to readily absorb rain and produces a mulch of dirt blanket of fine soil which prevents the escape of soil moisture. One trip to the row, whether narrow or wide.

With one man The Fowler does as much work as you can do with a two horse cultivator—and better work—because it cultivates shallow—has no prongs or teeth to destroy or disturb the crop roots. You can work right up to the plant with a Fowler. By removing plow foot you can cultivate beside the row. You need this now.

The Unexpected

By PRICE DARROW

(Copyright, 1918, Western Newspaper Union.)

It was the happiest day of his life, and everybody about the great chemical works where Norman Wilde was an humble employee knew it, and with smiles and congratulations endeavored to express their honest friendliness. That evening he was to wed the woman of his choice, and he bustled about actively, aiming to leave everything appertaining to his work in ship-shape order while he enjoyed a week of honeymoon bliss.

He was a poor man, earned only fair wages and was marrying a poor girl—poor, indeed, in worldly goods, but inestimably rich in those sterling qualities of heart and mind that go for perfection. Norman had known Effie Deane for nearly a year.

It was just after noon and Norman was passing through the stock room, when his elbow tipped an upright frame holding a number of filled phials ready to be corked and labeled.

"Look out!" came the sharp warning from a worker nearby. "That's corrosive stuff, and dangerous."

Norman dodged, but not in time to avoid receiving across his eyes the contents of one of the bottles. He felt a glaze instantly come over his power of vision.

"Wait!" spoke the head chemist, going for some neutralizing acid and injecting it under the lids.

"How is it now?" he questioned.

"I can see all right now," said Norman. "Things are a little hazy, but that will soon pass away."

It did pass away, although the affected eyes showed red and swollen through the wedding ceremony. The next day, however, the wedding tour was interrupted by the discovery by Norman that any remote object presented an indistinguishable blur. They went to a hotel. Effie was all alarm and solicitude. She summoned the house physician.

"You had better return home at once," he advised, "where you can have rest and care. I shall have to bandage your eyes."

Practically a blind man, Norman Wilde returned to the Deane home. He was agitated and anxious. Months of idleness! It seemed a lifetime! The tender, solacing ministrations of Effie, however, made his affliction endurable. The sympathy and helpfulness of her parents showed the great depths of true nature.

A shaded room was awarded the newly married pair. There all through the long day Effie read to her afflicted husband, conversed with him, attended to his every want.

"Father Deane doesn't seem to be around much," observed Norman one day.

"Oh, father was always that way," declared Effie. "He has got some friends in the village who are great checker players, and it has been his delight for years to pass his time with them."

Then came glad news. At the end of two months the attending physician announced that all traces of permanent infection had disappeared from the eyes. The first day of restored sight Effie led Norman into the garden. His rapt gaze never left her beloved face except when she brought him some pretty flower or buried her head upon his breast to weep out her rare gladness.

"A letter," she announced, the next morning. "Shall I open and read it to you, dear?"

"Let me see if I'm not far enough along to do so for myself," suggested Norman.

Just then Effie went to the house to answer the call of the grocer. Norman opened the letter and trembled all over. He could scarcely realize its contents to be true. It inclosed a draft for twenty thousand dollars from a law firm who had for five years been attempting the collection of a claim preferred by his dead father against a great corporation. Long since Norman had given up all hope of ever recovering the claim. He tried to be calm and collected as Effie reappeared. The next day he went to the plant, to arrange for resuming work, he told her.

It was in the village that Norman obtained a solution of the mystery of the daily absence of Mr. Deane. He learned that the old man had gone to work as a factory gatekeeper while his wife had secured occasional employment at the local knitting mill.

"Dear, grand people!" uttered Norman, overcome with fervid emotion.

"Ah! has any man ever before been blessed with such unselfish love and sacrifice?"

It was after supper that evening when he confronted Mr. and Mrs. Deane with his knowledge of their kindly action.

"Had to keep the meal box full, Norman!" chuckled the old man.

"Why, you are our own son. Why wouldn't we value the privilege of showing you how much we love you?" challenged Mrs. Deane.

"All right," said Norman, gayly. "But we're going to make a new deal, and he told them about his unexpected fortune."

"Why, Norman! what are you going to do with all that money?" breathlessly propounded the dazzled Effie.

"With half of it, you mean," smiled Norman. "I've placed the other half in the local bank, to the account of the dearest people I ever knew—Mr. and Mrs. Josiah Deane."

During November, the United States mints coined 77,000,000 pennies, 18,000,000 dimes and 11,000,000 nickels to meet the holiday trade demand.

What Pride Brought

By EVELYN LEE

(Copyright, 1918, Western Newspaper Union.)

It was not for their final good that Mrs. Eben Hartley and Mrs. Victoria Dawes, sisters, found themselves helpless. The inheritance was small but magnified in their imaginations as positive wealth.

"Five thousand dollars!" exclaimed Mrs. Hartley. "Why, we can afford a piano and an automobile. And we can send Lucia to the musical college."

Her sister, Victoria Dawes, had these attributes of luxury already, her husband being at the apex of a city brokerage career. He promised to double her fortune if she would place it in his hands to invest.

"I wouldn't go rash, Martha," plain-spoken, practical Eben Hartley had said. "Of course, it's your money, but the Warder farm is going to be put up for sale, and, added to ours, it would make us pretty nearly independent."

"We've got all the farm I want," observed his wife, quite snappily.

Mrs. Dawes came for a visit. She appeared all fuss and feathers and vanity, her head carried high among the more humble friends of earlier years.

So, from light suggestion the situation evolved sullenness and complaints. Mrs. Dawes had the faculty of stirring up trouble. Martha flaunted the fact in Eben's face constantly that she had money and that she was entitled to something better than "farm drudgery."

It was cherry time, and Mrs. Hartley was famous for her pies made out of that luscious fruit. It was about the middle of the afternoon when she and her sister came out to the orchard where Eben was at work.

"Put on your coat and go down to the village store and get some sugar," ordered Martha, and her tone was so mandatory and uncivil that a slight flush crossed Eben's sunburned face.

He started down the road, followed by the half audible remark of his sister-in-law that "he might be obliging once in a while," and consoling Martha because of the hardship of "living in the wilderness away from the store conveniences of the city."

Eben did not allow his temper to get the best of him, but he saw whither they were drifting. The influence of his sister-in-law over his wife was likely to lead to a disruption of hitherto undisturbed domestic harmony. He felt that it was either a compromise or a combat.

"I'll not leave the old homestead for any city experiments, nor will I ever sell it," he decided firmly. "I won't help waste Martha's money and cater to the whims that have spoiled her sister. Five pounds of sugar. I'll go through the switchyards to make a short cut of it."

As he walked between two lines of stationary freight cars, he never knew what struck him senseless. He could only surmise in future years the circumstances which landed him thousands of miles away from home. Two tramps had crept him.

One had seized a piece of railroad iron, had crept up behind him stealthily and had delivered a crushing blow on the head.

"Get him out of sight—quick! Into that empty," spoke one of the men, and Eben was despoiled of all he possessed, and closing the car door upon him, the tramps departed.

When, three years later, Eben came back to normal, he found himself in charge of a great ranch near to the Mexican line in Texas. That blow awarded him had blotted out memory. Those on the ranch had told him later how they found him wandering aimlessly across a prairie, starved looking and dazed. Apparently Eben had been shut up in the freight car long enough to traverse half the continent. The man who came across him was one Ford, owner of immense herds of cattle. He had taken Eben to the home ranch. There, among farm surroundings, the refugee had brightened up. His practical inborn instinct of farming had aroused instantly. Mechanically, but effectively, he resumed the old farm functions. Dazed most of the time, he still carried out the duties assigned to him. He was given an interest in a herd by Ford. At the end of three years he was, comparatively speaking, a rich man, and one day the past all came back to him.

Meanwhile there had been a vast sensation at the farm over the disappearance of Eben. His wife had mourned and had set in action various agencies to disclose his fate, but unavailingly. She had left the farm to take up her home with her sister and was induced, like Victoria, to invest her little fortune with Mr. Dawes. Within a year the latter committed suicide, leaving his wife and sister-in-law without a dollar of inheritance.

They were compelled to go back to the farm, upon which nothing could be borrowed except for its direct operation and taxes. Hard was the work of the two women, but at the least they had a shelter over their heads. One afternoon someone hustled in through the kitchen doorway.

"Martha," announced Eben Hartley, placing a package on the table, "there's the five pounds of sugar you sent me for."

And the contrite wife and the chastened sister-in-law greeted the returned wanderer with welcome and love.

by LIEUTENANT PAT O'BRIEN

(By the author of "The Hun")

terdam, which was my next objective. It was due to the generosity of these people that I was able to reach the British consul as quickly as I did. Some day I hope to return to Holland and repay every single soul who played the part of the good Samaritan to me.

With the money that these people gave me I was able to get a third-class ticket to Rotterdam, and I was glad that I didn't have to travel first-class, for I would have looked as much out of place in a first-class carriage as a Hun would appear in heaven.

That night I slept in the house of my Dutch friends, where they fixed me up most comfortably. In the morning they gave me breakfast and then escorted me to the station.

While I was waiting at the station a crowd gathered round me and soon it seemed as if the whole town had turned out to get a look at me. It was very embarrassing, particularly as I could give them no information regarding the cause of my condition, although, of course, they all knew that I was a refugee from Belgium.

As the train pulled out of the station, the crowd gave a loud cheer and the tears almost came to my eyes as I contrasted in my mind the conduct of this crowd and the one that had gathered at the station in Ghent when I had departed a prisoner en route for the reprisal camp. I breathed a sigh of relief as I thought of that reprisal camp and how fortunate I had really been, despite all my sufferings, to have escaped it. Now, at any rate, I was a free man and I would soon be sending home the joyful news that I had made good my escape!

At Elmhoven two Dutch officers got into the compartment with me. They looked at me with very much disfavor, not knowing, of course, that I was a British officer. My clothes were still pretty much in the condition they were when I crossed the border, although I had been able to scrape off some of the mud I had collected the night before. I had not shaved nor trimmed my beard for many days, and I must have presented a sorry appearance. I could hardly blame them for edging away from me.

The trip from Elmhoven to Rotterdam passed without special incident. At various stations passengers would get in the compartment and, observing my unusual appearance, would endeavor to start a conversation with me. None of them spoke English, however, and they had to use their own imagination as to my identity.

When I arrived at Rotterdam I asked a policeman who stood in front of the station where I could find the British consul, but I could not make him understand. I next applied to a taxicab driver.

"English consul—British consul—American consul—French consul!" I said, hoping that if he didn't understand one he might recognize another.

He eyed me with suspicion and motioned me to get in and drove off. I had no idea where he was taking me, but after a quarter of an hour's ride he brought up in front of the British consul. Never before was I so glad to see the Union Jack!

I beckoned to the chauffeur to go with me up to the office, as I had no money with which to pay him, and when he got to the consulate I told them that if they would pay the taxi fare I would tell them who I was and how I happened to be there.

They knew at once that I was an escaped prisoner and they readily paid the chauffeur and invited me to give some account of myself.

They treated me most cordially and were intensely interested in the brief account I gave them of my adventures. Word was sent to the consul general and he immediately sent for me. When I went in he shook hands with me, greeting me very heartily and offering me a chair.

He then sat down, screwed a monocle on his eye and viewed me from top to toe. I could see that only good breeding kept him from laughing at the spectacle I presented. I could see he wanted to laugh in the worst way.

"Go ahead and laugh!" I said. "You can't offend me the way I feel this blessed day!" and he needed no second invitation. Incidentally it gave me a chance to laugh at him, for I was about as much amused as he was.

After he had laughed himself about sick he got up and slapped me on the back and invited me to tell him my story.

"Lieutenant," he said when I had concluded, "you can have anything you want. I think your experience entitles you to it."

"Well, consul," I replied, "I would like a bath, a shave, a haircut and some civilized clothes about as badly as a man ever needed them. I beg your pardon, but I am a man of simple tastes."

telling her that I am safe and on my way to England!"

The consul gave me the necessary information and I had the satisfaction of knowing before I left the office that the cable, with its good tidings, was on its way to America.

Then he sent for one of the naval men who had been interned there since the beginning of the war and who was able to speak Dutch and told him to take good care of me.

After I had been bathed and shaved and had a haircut I bought some new clothes and had something to eat, and I felt like a new man.

As I walked through the streets of Rotterdam breathing the air of freedom again and realizing that there was no longer any danger of being captured and taken back to prison, it was a wonderful sensation.

I don't believe there will ever be a country that will appear in my eyes quite as good as Holland did then. I had to be somewhat careful, however, because Holland was full of German spies and I knew they would be keen to learn all they possibly could about my escape and my adventures so that the authorities in Belgium could mete out punishment to everyone who was in any respect to blame for it. As I was in Rotterdam only one day, they didn't have very much opportunity to learn anything from me.

The naval officer who accompanied me and acted as interpreter for me introduced me to many other soldiers and sailors who had escaped from Belgium when the Germans took Antwerp, and as they had arrived in Holland in uniform and under arms, the laws of neutrality compelled their internment and they had been there ever since.

The life of a man who is interned in a neutral country, I learned, is anything but satisfactory. He gets one month a year to visit his home. If he lives in England that is not so bad, but if he happens to live farther away, the time he has to spend with his folks is very short, as the month's leave does not take into consideration the time consumed in traveling to and from Holland.

The possibility of escape from Holland is always there, but the British authorities have an agreement with the Dutch government to send refugees back immediately. In this respect, therefore, the position of a man who is interned is worse than that of a prisoner who, if he does succeed in making his escape, is naturally received with open arms in his native land. Apart from this restraint, however, internment, with all its drawbacks, is a thousand times, yes, a million times, better than being a prisoner of war in Germany.

It seems to me that when the war is over and the men who have been imprisoned in Germany return home, they should be given a bigger and greater reception than the most victorious army that ever marched into a city, for they will have suffered and gone through more than the world will ever be able to understand.

No doubt you will find in the German prison camps one or two faint-hearted individuals with a pronounced yellow streak who voluntarily gave up the struggle and gave up their liberty rather than risk their lives or limbs. These and cases, however, are, I am sure, extremely few. Nine hundred and ninety-nine out of a thousand of the men fighting in the allied lines would rather be in the front trenches, fighting every day, with all the horrors and all the risks, than be a prisoner of war in Germany, for the men in France have a very keen realization of what that means.

But to return to my day in Rotterdam.

After I was fixed up I returned to the consulate and arrangements were made for my transportation to England at once. Fortunately there was a boat leaving that very night and I was allowed to take passage on it.

Just as we were leaving Rotterdam, the boat I was on rammed our own convoy, one of the destroyers, and injured it so badly that it had to put back to port. It would have been a strange climax to my adventure if the disaster had resulted in the sinking of my boat and I had lost my life while on my way to England after having successfully outwitted the Hun.

But my luck was with me to the last, and while the accident resulted in some delay our boat was not seriously damaged and made the trip over in schedule time and without further accident, another destroyer having been assigned to escort us through the danger zone in place of the one which had been put out of commission.

When I arrived in London, the reaction from the strain I had been under for nearly three months began to tell.

It was not many days, however, before I regained control of myself and felt in first-class shape.

Although the British authorities in Holland had wired my mother from Holland that I was safe and on my way to England, the first thing I did when we landed was to send her a cable myself.

The cable read as follows:

"Mrs. M. J. O'Brien, Mombence, Ill., U. S. A."

"Just escaped from Germany. Let her follow."

As I delivered it to the cable dispatcher I could just imagine the exultation with which my mother would receive it and the pride she would feel as she exhibited it among her neighbors and friends.

I could hear the volley of "I told you so's" that greeted her good tidings.

"It would take more than the Kaiser to keep Pat in Germany," I could hear one of them saying.

"Know he'd be back for Christmas, anyway," I could hear another remark.

"I had an idea that Pat and his comrades might spend Christmas in Berlin," I could hear another admitting, "but I did not think any other part of Germany would appeal to him very much."

"Mrs. O'Brien, did Pat write you how many German prisoners he brought back with him?" I could hear still another credulous friend inquiring.

It was all very amusing and gratifying to me and I must confess I felt quite cocky as I walked into the war department to report.

For the next five days I was kept very busy answering questions put to me by the military authorities regarding what I had observed as to conditions in Germany and behind the lines.

What I reported was taken down by a stenographer and made part of the official records, but I did not give them my story in narrative form. The information I was able to give was naturally of interest to various branches of the service, and experts in every line of government work took it in turns to question me. One morning would be devoted, for instance, to answering questions of a military nature—German methods behind the front line trenches, tactics, morale of troops and similar matters. Then the aviation experts would take a whack at me and discuss with me all I had observed of German flying corps methods and equipment. Then, again, the food experts would interrogate me as to what I had learned of food conditions in Germany, Luxembourg and Belgium, and as I had lived pretty close to the ground for the best part of seventy-two days I was able to give them some fairly accurate reports as to actual agricultural conditions, many of the things I told them probably having more significance to them than they had to me.

There were many things I had observed which I have not referred to in these pages because their value to us might be diminished if the Germans knew we were aware of them, but they were all reported to the authorities and it was very gratifying to me to hear that the experts considered some of them of the greatest value.

One of the most amusing incidents of my return occurred when I called at my bankers in London to get my personal effects.

The practice in the Royal Flying Corps when a pilot is reported missing is to have two of his comrades assigned to go through his belongings, check them over, destroy anything that it might not be to his interest to preserve, and send the whole business to his banker or his home, as the case may be. Every letter is read through, but their contents is never afterwards discussed or revealed in any way. If the pilot is finally reported dead, his effects are forwarded to his next of kin, but while he is officially only "missing," or is known to be a prisoner of war, they are kept either at the squadron headquarters or sent to his bankers.

In my case as soon as it was learned that I had fallen from the sky, it was assumed that I had been killed and my chum, Paul Haney, and another officer detailed to check over my effects. The list they made and to which they affixed their signatures, as I have previously mentioned, is now in my possession and is one of the most treasured souvenirs of my adventure.

My trunk was sent to Cox & Co. in due course, and now that I was in London I thought I would go and claim it.

When I arrived at the bank I applied to the proper window for my mail and trunk.

"Who are you?" I was asked rather sharply.

"Well, I guess no one has any greater right to Pat O'Brien's effects than I have," I replied, "and I would be obliged to you if you would look them up for me."

"That may be all right, my friend," replied the clerk, "but according to prisoner of war in Germany, and we can't very well turn over his effects to anyone else unless either you present proof that he is dead and that you are his lawful representative, or else deliver to us a properly authenticated order from him to give them to you."

He was very positive about it all, but quite polite, and I thought I would kid him no more.

"Well," I said, "I can't very well present proofs to you that Pat O'Brien is dead, but I will do the best I can to prove to you that he is alive, and if you haven't quite forgotten his signature I guess I can write you out an order that will answer all your requirements and enable you to give me Pat O'Brien's belongings without running any risks," and I scribbled my signature on a scrap of paper and handed it to him.

He looked at me carefully through the latticed window, then jumped down from the high chair and came outside to clasp me by the hand.

"Good heavens, lieutenant!" he exclaimed, as he pumped my hand up and down, "how did you ever get away?" and I had to sit right down and tell him and half a dozen other people in the bank all about my experiences.

I had been in England about five days when I received a telegram which, at first, occasioned me almost as much concern as the unexpected sight of a German spiked helmet had caused me in Belgium. It read as follows:

"Lieut. P. A. O'Brien, Royal Flying Corps, Regent's Palace Hotel, London."

"The king is very glad to hear of your escape from Germany. If you are to be in London on Friday next, December 7th, His majesty will receive you at Buckingham palace at 10:30 a. m. Please acknowledge."

"CROMER."

Of course, there was only one thing to do and that was to obey orders. I was an officer in the army and the king was my commander in chief. I had to go, and so I sat down and sent off the following answer:

"Lieut. P. A. O'Brien, Buckingham Palace, London."

"I will attend Buckingham palace as directed, Friday, December 7th, at 10:30."

"LIEUT. PAT O'BRIEN."

In the interval that elapsed, I must confess, the ordeal of calling on the king of England loomed up more dreadfully every day, and I really believed I would rather have spent another day in the empty house in the big city in Belgium or, say, two more days at Courtal, than to go through what I believed to be in store for me. Orders were orders, however, and there was no way of getting out of it. As it turned out, it wasn't half as bad as I had feared—the contrary, it was one of the most agreeable experiences of my life.

CHAPTER XIX.

I Am Presented to the King.

On the dreaded 7th of December arrived, I halted a taxicab and in a matter-of-fact tone of voice as I could command, directed the chauffeur to drive me to Buckingham palace, as though I was paying my regular morning call on the king.

My friends' version of this incident, I have since heard, is that I seated myself in the taxi and leaning through the window said: "Buckingham palace!" whereupon the taxi driver got down, opened the door and exclaimed threateningly:

"If you don't get out quietly and chuck your drunken talk, I'll jolly quick call a bobby, bil' me, if I won't!"

But I can only give my word that nothing of the kind occurred.

When I arrived at the palace gate, the sentry on guard asked me who I was and then let me pass at once up to the front entrance of the palace.

There I was met by an elaborately uniformed and equally elaborately decorated personage who, judging by the long row of medals he wore, must have seen long and distinguished service for the king.

I was relieved of my overcoat, hat and stick and conducted up a long stairway, where I was turned over to another functionary, who led me to the reception room of Earl Cromer, the king's secretary.

There I was introduced to another earl and a duke, whose name I do not remember. I was becoming so bewildered, in fact, that it is a wonder that I remember as much as I do of this eventful day.

I had heard many times that before being presented to the king a man is coached carefully as to just how he is to act and what he is to say and do, and all this time I was wondering when this drilling would commence. I certainly had no idea that I was to be ushered into the august presence of the king without some preliminary instruction.

Earl Cromer and the other noblemen talked to me for a while and got me to relate in brief the story of my experience, and they appeared to be very much interested. Perhaps they did it only to give me confidence and as a sort of rehearsal for the main performance, which was scheduled to take place much sooner than I expected.

I had barely completed my story when the door opened and an attendant entered and announced:

"The king will receive Lieutenant O'Brien."

If he had announced that the kaiser was outside with a squad of German guards to take me back to Courtal my heart could not have sunk deeper.

Earl Cromer beckoned me to follow him and we went into a large room, where I supposed I was at last to receive my coaching, but I observed the earl bow to a man standing there and realized that I was standing in the presence of the king of England.

"Your majesty, Lieutenant O'Brien!" the earl announced, and then immediately backed from the room. I believed I would have followed right behind him, but by that time the king had me by the hand and was congratulating me, and he spoke so very cordially and democratically that he put me at my ease at once.

He then asked me how I felt and whether I was in a condition to converse, and when I told him I was, he said he would be very much pleased to hear my story in detail.

"Were you treated any worse by the Germans, lieutenant?" he asked, "on account of being an American?" I've heard that the Germans had threatened to shoot Americans serving in the British army if they captured them, classing them as murderers, because America was a neutral country and Americans had no right to mix in the war. Did you find that to be the case?"

I told him that I had heard similar reports, but that I did not notice any appreciable difference in my treatment from that accorded Britishers.

The king declared that he believed my escape was due to my pluck and will power and that it was one of the most remarkable escapes he had ever heard of, which I thought was quite a compliment, coming as it did from the king of England.

"I hope that all the Americans will give as good an account of themselves as you have, lieutenant," he said, "and I feel quite sure they will. I fully appreciate all the service rendered us by Americans before the States entered the war."

At this moment I asked him if I was taking too much time.

"Not at all, lieutenant, not at all!" he replied, most cordially. "I was extremely interested in the brief report that came to me of your wonderful escape and I sent for you because I wanted to hear the whole story firsthand, and I am very glad you were able to come."

I had not expected to remain more than a few minutes, as I understood that four minutes was considered a long audience with the king. Fifty-two minutes elapsed before I finally left there!

During all this time I had done most of the talking, in response to the king's request to tell my story. Occasionally he interrupted to ask a question about a point he wanted me to make clear, but for the most part he was content to play the part of a listener.

He seemed to be very keen on everything I said, and I attributed some of the tight laces I got into during my escape he evinced his sympathy. Occasionally I introduced some of the few humorous incidents of my adventure and in every instance he laughed heartily.

Altogether the impression I got of him was that he is a very genial, gracious and alert sovereign. I know I have felt more ill at ease when talking to a major than when speaking to the king—but perhaps I had more cause to.

During the whole interview we were left entirely alone, which impressed me as significant of the democratic manner of the present king of England, and I certainly came away with the utmost respect for him.

In all my conversation, I recalled afterwards, I never addressed the king as "Your Majesty," but used the military "sir." As I was a British officer and he was the head of the army, he probably appreciated this manner of address more than if I had used the usual "Your Majesty." Perhaps he attributed it to the fact that I was an American. At any rate, he didn't evince any displeasure at my departure from what I understand is the usual form of address.

Before I left he asked me what my plans for the future were.

"Why, sir, I hope to rejoin my squadron at the earliest possible moment!" I replied.

"No, lieutenant," he rejoined, "that is out of the question. We can't risk losing you for good by sending you back to a part of the front exposed you."

"Well, if I can't serve in France, sir," I suggested, "wouldn't it be feasible for me to fly in Italy or Salonika?"

"No," he replied, "that would be almost as bad. The only thing that I can suggest for you to do is either to take up instruction—a very valuable form of service—or perhaps it might be safe enough for you to serve in Egypt, but just at present, lieutenant, I think you have done enough anyway."

Then he rose and shook hands with me and wished me the best of luck, and we both said "Good-by."

In the adjoining room I met Earl Cromer again, and as he accompanied me to the door seemed to be surprised at the length of my visit.

As I left the palace a policeman and a sentry outside came smartly to attention. Perhaps they figured I had been made a general.

As I was riding back to the hotel in a taxi I reflected on the remarkable course of events which in the short space of nine months had taken me through so much and ended up, like the finish of a book, with my being received by his majesty, the king! When I first joined the Royal Flying Corps I never expected to see the inside of Buckingham palace, much less being received by the king.

CHAPTER XX.

Home Again.

That same day, in the evening, I was tendered a banquet at the Hotel Savoy by a fellow officer who had bet three other friends of mine that I would be home by Christmas. This wager had been made at the time he heard that I was a prisoner of war, and the dinner was the stake.

The first intimation he had of my safe return from Germany and the fact that he had won his bet was a telegram I sent him reading as follows:

"Lieut. Louis Grand:
"War bread bad, so I came home."
"PAT."

He said he would not part with that message for a thousand dollars. Other banquets followed in fast succession. After I had survived nine of them I figured that I was now in as much danger of succumbing to a surfeit of rich food as I had previously been of dying from starvation, and for my own protection, I decided to leave London. Moreover, my thoughts and my heart were turning back to the land of my birth, where I knew there was a loving mother who was longing for more substantial evidence of my safe escape than the cables and letters she had received.

Strangely enough, on the boat which carried me across the Atlantic, I saw an R. F. C. man—Lieutenant Lascelles.

I walked over to him, held out my hand and said "Hello!"

He looked at me steadily for at least a minute.

"My friend, you certainly look like Pat O'Brien," he declared, "but I can't believe my eyes. Who are you?"

I quickly convinced him that his eyes were still to be relied upon, and then he stared at me for another minute or two, shaking his head dubiously.

His mystification was quite explainable. The last time he had seen me I was going down to earth with a bullet in my face and my machine doing a spinning-nose dive. He was one of my comrades in the flying corps and was in the fight which resulted in my capture. He said he had read the report that I was a prisoner of war, but he had never believed it, as he did not think it possible for me to survive that fall.

He was one of the few men living out of eighteen who were originally in my squadron—I do not mean the eighteen with whom I sailed from Canada last May, but the squadron I joined in France.

As we sat on the deck exchanging experiences, I would frequently notice him gazing intently in my face as if he were not quite sure that the whole proposition was not a hoax and that I was an impostor.

Outside of this unexpected meeting, my trip was uneventful.

I arrived at St. John, New Brunswick, and eventually in the little town of Momena, Ill., on the Kan-kakee river.

I have said that I was never so happy to arrive in a country as I was when I set foot on Dutch soil. Now, I'm afraid I shall have to take that statement back. Not until I finally landed in Momena and realized that I was again in the town of my childhood days did I enjoy that feeling of absolute security which one never really appreciates until after a visit to foreign parts.

Now that I am back, the whole adventure constantly seems to me as a dream, and I'm never quite sure that I won't wake up and find it so.
