Poetry.All Things Perish Save Vir- tue.

Sweet thorn—be cool, so calm, so bright,

The dew shall weep thy fall to-night,

For thou must die.

Sweet rose—whose fragrance now I crave,

To glad my sense and joy mine eye,

Thy root is ever in its grave,

And thou must die.

Sweet Spring—so full of shine and showers,

It makes the weary spirit sigh,

To think, with all thy herbs and flowers,

That thou must die.

Sweet music—'tis the lovely song

Which from my harp in window high

Is floating on the breeze along,

E'en thou must die.

And all the bright and glittering trails

Of stars that stud the deep blue sky

Must all their perihelion remain

To glad the eye?

And vales, and fields, and rushing streams,

And mountains that invade the sky,

Are they as baseless as our dreams?

And must they die?

And all that's beautiful and fair

On Nature's face—love's melody,

That makes sweet music of the air,

All—all must die!

And man, frail form of senseless clay,

Thou now thy glance is proud and high,

Perchance upon this passing day

He too may die!

But the bright soul that, shined within

The quenchless light in mortal form—

Thou dimmed by misery and sin,

Defies the worm.

When all the stars shall fade away,

And spens in their own blaze expire,

And trackless comets cease to stray

With wand'ring fire,

The soul shall ever live, nor know

The lapse of time, but dwell on high,

And share in endless joy or woe—

Eternity.

THE GREAT WHEEL.

BY MRS. MARIAN STOCKTON.

Sun, and for which the First Prize of Five Hundred Dollars was Awarded.

CHAPTER XXII.DOUBTING AND TWISTING.

Phoebe was disappointed that Richard had paid her no visit. When she found that he was staying in Depotford without any business to keep him there, and that he had evidently given up all thought of Madeline, she was angry. She had been so kind to him when they met, she could imagine no cause to bring him back to the place but her own sweet self. This was strange, but they were often together elsewhere, and she fancied he sought her out. He certainly talked with her a great deal more than he had formerly done. She began to indulge once more in her delicious daydreams. The school philosophy was again dislodged from its dusty shelf, and diligently studied that she might be able to converse with Richard upon his favorite pursuits. Poor

Phoebe! She understood but little of love's tactics. If there was anything that she had learned in her school days, it was that she should be true to her friends, and that she should be true to her conscience.

That counted nothing, Horace thought. Madeline loved him then, and in his opinion would marry him if not prevented. Horace appealed to Phoebe's vanity in the same way

Highy had done—the difference was that Horace had got hold of the right man! He assumed that Richard really fancied Phoebe, but had been led away from her by Madeline's wealth.

It is a wonder that the similarity of these stories of the two conspirators did not strike Phoebe, but she never thought of it. Her mind was overwhelmed with the one idea—if Madeline loved Richard, then indeed, was her own case desperate; for too well she knew he loved Madeline. But this she did not confide to Horace.

His plan was for her simply to let

Madeline know that Richard loved her (Phoebe) and cared for Madeline's money only. He expected no promise from Phoebe, but having assured her that he knew Richard had returned to Deplotford for the express purpose of winning the heiress, he went his way and left the heaven to work.

It worked so well that it set Phoebe nearly beside herself with anger and envy. She had got so mixed up with Madeline's loving and not loving

Richard, and having been told that

Horace loved her (Phoebe), and now being told that Richard loved her, but would marry Madeline, and her own uncertainty upon all these points that she was bewildered. It would be a master-stroke, she thought, to play into both Highy's and Horace's hands, and thus set both Horace and Richard free from Madeline's charms.

If she could get this letter for Highy

Horace would be free. If she could poison Madeline's mind against Richard he would be free. Perhaps they would both seek the hand of their liberator, and she, instead of Madeline, would have the proud satisfaction of choosing between them. This was what her thoughts amounted to,

though they did not resolve themselves into such clear method.

Unfortunately, while she was in this mood, Madeline came in. She had felt low-spirited at home, and had got Ross Peters to go to Phoebe's with her. She told him to call for her in an hour. She hoped by that time she would be a little less heavy-hearted. But she was doomed to carry a heavier heart away with her. For she had not been long in Phoebe's room before the latter said to her,

quite abruptly:

"Is Mr. Moreham going to enter the mill again?"

"I don't know," said Madeline—

"I don't concern myself in such matters." But she mentally resolved that if this were true she would concern herself in this matter. He must not be allowed to do it.

"I wonder what brought him back

Poetry.

Life's Measure.

"He liveth long who liveth well."

So ran the legend true and bold;

To keep this truth in mind were well,

For truth is better kept than gold.

The one who liveth in an hour;

One never dies; but bright and pure

As heaven itself, when earthly power

Has passed, forever shall endure.

Not by the years of life is told

The length of life, but by the seal

And kindly words, as growing old,

Men for each other do feel.

His life is long whose work is well.

And, be his station low or high,

He who the most good work can tell

Lives longest, though he soonest die.

Then, as the swift-winged moments speed,

Freight them with wealth of truth and love

With garnered sheaves of thought and deed

For the glad harvest home above.

Within the rankling breast of hate,

In desert ways where no flowers bloom,

In scenes where folly sits in state,

In vain-faced sorrow's house of gloom.

Sow love, and taste its fruitage sweet,

Sow smiles, and see the desert spring.

Sow wisdom for thy harvest meet,

Sow sunlight for the joy 'twill bring.

Sow love, and taste its fruitage sweet,

Sow smiles, and see the desert spring.

Sow wisdom for thy harvest meet,

Sow sunlight for the joy 'twill bring.

Sow love, and taste its fruitage sweet,

Sow smiles, and see the desert spring.

Sow wisdom for thy harvest meet,

Sow sunlight for the joy 'twill bring.

Sow love, and taste its fruitage sweet,

Sow smiles, and see the desert spring.

Sow wisdom for thy harvest meet,

Sow sunlight for the joy 'twill bring.

Sow love, and taste its fruitage sweet,

Sow smiles, and see the desert spring.

Sow wisdom for thy harvest meet,

Sow sunlight for the joy 'twill bring.

Sow love, and taste its fruitage sweet,

Sow smiles, and see the desert spring.

Sow wisdom for thy harvest meet,

Sow sunlight for the joy 'twill bring.

Sow love, and taste its fruitage sweet,

Sow smiles, and see the desert spring.

Sow wisdom for thy harvest meet,

Sow sunlight for the joy 'twill bring.

Sow love, and taste its fruitage sweet,

Sow smiles, and see the desert spring.

Sow wisdom for thy harvest meet,

CHAPTER XXVI.—continued.

This man who walked beside him—what should he do with him? He was so happy himself that he could afford to be in a good humor even with Higby. He was just now inclined to think that when things went wrong in the world it was because of crooked circumstances, not crooked people. Madeline had told him that she thought the intercourse between him and her father was of a peculiar friendly nature, and that her father had been indebted to him for many acts of kindness. "He may have had noble aspirations in his youth," thought Richard, "but disappointed months have crowded upon him, and embittered him, and a long residence

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1876.

None will satisfy the American people but the impeachment of Grant and Cameron, and especially Grant, for his revolutionary practices. The House should prefer articles of impeachment at once, and let the Senate take the responsibility of acquitting him.

Hayes said in his Springfield speech the other day, that he "had faith in the people." Well, if he has, why don't he submit to their verdict. They have spoken in thunder tones against him, to the tune of 250,000 majority. Why don't he show his faith by his works?

It is a strange fact that every town and city of 5,000 and upwards which have held elections since the Presidential muddle have gone for the Democrats, including Boston, Springfield, Worcester, Fall River, &c. This indicates that they do not like Hayes, nor admire the way his friends seek to put him in.

The Reds don't want the truth told, nor the law vindicated. Gov. Grover, of Oregon, has had his reasons for issuing his certificate to Crozier as an elector printed in a pamphlet with reference to the law requiring it to be done, but the Tribune's correspondent says the printers at Washington have been forbidden to publish it. The truth is what hurts the Reds.

WADE HAMPTON has been inaugurated Governor of South Carolina, but the gray fellow Chamberlain, backed by the knave, Grant, still contends that he is Governor, and will not vacate. Forbearance with Grant and the knaves who are surrounding him, will soon cease to be a virtue, and the freemen of this country who seem to be slaves to such a drunken dynasty, will rise in the majesty of their might, and sweep them away with a beam of destruction. Tyranny's take warning.

How does postmaster James, of New York, know that Mr. Hewitt's letters were not opened in the New York post office? He perhaps has not seen one of those letters in transit since the election. If the thieves who desire to know what honest people are doing, seek information through that source, they are sure to get that information through some subordinate, who will not hold any responsibility. We have heard such charges from other sources, and have no doubt that Mr. Hewitt's correspondence has been tampered with.

Many people are anxiously inquiring what is our opinion as to the result of the Presidential muddle. We answer as follows: That Samuel J. Tilden will be inaugurated President on the 4th or 5th of March next, and issue his orders to the heads of departments, the army and navy, and if there should be any disobedience, there are Democrats and Conservatives enough in the country to see that the laws are faithfully executed. There will be no civil war, unless the revolutionists and knaves at Washington refuse to obey the legal authority of the government, which is not very likely. At all events, the Democracy will raise no fight until some disorderly persons refuse to obey President Tilden.

The New York Tribune says that Gov. Hayes' waste basket is full of letters inquiring who he is going to put in his cabinet, and adds, "why don't they inquire of Gov. Tilden? Mr. Hewitt says he is elected." So says all honest men. But one reason why they want to know who is to be in Hayes' cabinet is, because Chamberlain promised Wells, Kellogg, and Chamberlain each a place, and the Republicans want to know about it, before they commit themselves to the fraud of claiming his election. The reason why the Democrats do not inquire who President-elect Tilden will put in his cabinet is, because he will not go so far, but has plenty of good supporters who will be acceptable to all persons, and not be dependent upon members of returning boards and carpet-baggers, who are acknowledged thieves. Well may honest Republicans inquire who are to be at the head of the departments of the government if the great fraud is consummated.

on members of returning boards and carpet-baggers, who are acknowledged thieves. Well may honest Republicans inquire who are to be at the head of the departments of the government if the great fraud is consummated.

The Philadelphia Times, in commenting on Grant's stump speech, in condemnation of the disloyal South and the loyal North, and in his remarks that Hayes had carried the loyal States, says:

And if war shall come—what then? Who are to go to the front and offer their lives to crown fraud as the jewel of the Republic? It is glibly spoken of as a conflict between the North and South; as the history of the late rebellion about to repeat itself. It is not so, for both sections seek peace, and both sections want honesty and law. The blatant champions of the Kellogg and Stearns return boards, which have written their infamy indelibly in the history of the country and stamped in ineffaceably on the brows of Grant, Chandler and Cameron, speak of the great North as overrunning the South in the choice of a President, and they point to the millions of strong men in the heart of the Republic as the soldiers who are to rush to the field to give victory to usurpation. They are mad in their trust to the people of the North, as they are mad in their unpeepable wrongs against the very integrity of free government, and they should reckon more wisely before they plunge themselves into a hopeless strife, and one from which they would be the first to escape when life for life shall be demanded. Turn to the great heart of the North and study its lesson to the country and to the world. Take the States of Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, stretching from the Eastern sea to the Father of Waters, and casting nearly one-half the votes given at the late election, and look at their admission to the speculative Yankee of the East, to the wayward dreamer of Empire on the Pacific, and to the blotted and broken South. Here is the vote—the great heart-throb of the nation:

| States. | Hayes. | Tilden. | Scot. |
|--------------|-----------|-----------|--------|
| Conn. elect. | 50,000 | 61,000 | 1,100 |
| New Jersey | 105,011 | 115,000 | 7,000 |
| New York | 320,000 | 320,000 | 6,000 |
| Pennsylvania | 384,148 | 365,204 | 8,425 |
| Ohio | 330,000 | 322,418 | 6,774 |
| Indiana | 208,111 | 213,200 | 9,986 |
| Illinois | 277,226 | 250,002 | 17,395 |
| | 1,832,257 | 1,861,922 | 45,239 |

These are the States which were the bulwark of safety for free government in the tempest of battle, and they speak million-tongued in the present peril. They gave Tilden 9,665 votes more than they gave Hayes in a poll of 3,762,418, and they cast a majority of 57,904 against the Republican candidate. And of all these millions of voters would follow the plumes of the Chamberlains and the Camerons and the Mortons to deadly conflict, that they might rule in revolutionary defiance of the plainly and legally expressed will of the American people? It is madness to summon this people to such a conflict, for it would be an overwhelming revolution of honest men against the authors of causeless war, and none could be answerable for the measure of retribution as outraged nation would visit upon the wicked conspirators whose mean ambition denies the country law and peace. The whole people plead for peace and just authority and if war shall be thrust upon them, it will not be well with those by whom war shall come.

Hayes' Proposed Cabinet.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 20th, 1876.

Mr. Editor:—As I proposed to communicate to you anything of interest I might be able to learn, I can assure you that I was fortunate to find out the following facts from one who knows: The committee to whom the matter was referred by Mr. Hayes, have made up the following slate for his Cabinet, which will certainly be if he is not "Bull-dozed" out of the Presidency by Gov. Tilden's "bulls." Mr. Don Cameron is the only person who will be continued in his place, that much is settled, unless his father prefers to be Secretary of State to going to the Court of St. James, in that case Sheridan is to be Secretary of War. Chandler goes from the Interior Department to the Navy Department. Morton is to be Secretary of State unless Simon Cameron takes the place of his son, in that case Morton goes to England. The Interior Department lies between Mr. Douglas and Mr. Elliott (colored). Grant favors the latter, but thinks Judge Bond is entitled to a place. The Treasury is to have a man from the Pacific States. Sharon, Jones and Booth are mentioned. It is most likely to be Senator Jones. Cushing is to be Attorney General. Butler would be if he could be spared from the House. J. Madison Wells is to be Postmaster General. This appointment was made by Grant's influence. Judge Taft takes the place of Mr. Cushing at the Spanish Court. Mr. Conkling refused to accept any place, or have anything to do with the movement. Mr. Blaine was not consulted, as he is believed to be opposed to Hayes' pretensions. It is feared here in Republican circles that five influential Senators will immediately after the holidays declare in favor of Tilden and Hendricks. In that case all the plans of Mr. Hayes' friends and would-be Cabinet officers goes to the wall. I will give you further facts as they develop from time to time. ENO.

One thing is certain. There will not be a new election with Mr. Hayes' consent. He could not carry a State in the Union, barring, perhaps, Iowa and Vermont, and he knows it.—Wilkesboro Herald.

In a pamphlet by Dr. Carter Blake it is stated that the lakes in the north-east, of Iceland are surrounded by prime colored mountains of pure sulphur.

The Might of Right.

Slowly but surely does the sovereign power of honest public opinion assert itself in the Presidential struggle forced upon the country by the Grant, Cameron and Chandler conspirators. They looked out over the land and saw convenient instruments to serve their revolutionary purposes, and they deliberately resolved to defy the solemn verdict of the nation, subvert its laws, enslave fraud as the final arbiter of the popular will, invoke sectional disorder to excuse their wrongs, and summon the sword to complete what fraud failed to accomplish. They had exhausted their resources to command the votes of the people for a candidate who was crushed by their favor, and having humiliated him in the contest by public contempt for every pledge he made for a reform Republican control, they decided to drag him down to infamy by an attempt to thrust him into the Presidency over the fairly expressed judgment of the Republic and over its insolently broken laws. In the three States where Republicans registered the voters, where Republican election boards received or rejected the votes in every precinct; where Republican supervisors or boards in every county computed and certified the returns, and where the army was ordered by the Republican Governors, all of whom were candidates before the people, whether they chose to have the protection of soldiers for their cause, the returns defeated their ticket and gave to Tilden a decided majority of the electoral votes. Chamberlain and Stearns were largely defeated for Governor; Kellogg was defeated for elector, and Packard was behind Nichols some ten thousand votes in the race for the chair Kellogg has usurped for four years. Such was the verdict of the people in three States where Democratic power was unfelt in either registering receiving, rejecting, counting or certifying the votes, and where the Governors had unlimited command of the army of the appointment of United States Marshals to aid their local constabulary in protecting their own voters. Not the sound of discord was heard in any of these States on election day, and violence was unknown among the people.

The votes of three States thus cast and computed under absolute and not eminently scrupulous Republican control, had to be boldly set aside to defeat the will of the nation. At no other period in the history of Republicanism could such a monstrous fraud have been attempted. Had there been Chamberlains and Camerons to propose such atrocious wrongs to law and justice in the days of Abraham Lincoln, they would have been spurned from the sanctuary of power and hissed from the association of decent men. But Grant rules to-day; Cameron is Minister; Chandler is Minister and political leader; Hayes is submissive under the dream of a withered crown, and the Kelloggs, the Stearnses and the Chamberlains are guided in their hitherto awkward lawlessness by the Shermons and the Mortons, who have struggled to fill the highest measure of shame for American statesmanship. In studied falsehood the vote of these States was proclaimed from day to day while the returns were hidden from the public. Army officers who were ready to oppress the people to outbreak, were chosen to obey the behests of the irresponsible return boards, and all the power of the government was summoned to prepare the country for predetermined false returns and to maintain them when made. In vain did the independent Republican press raise its warning voice; no heed was taken of the earnest appeals of upright Republicans for honesty and law, and the sincere protests of business men of every political faith fell like tuneless music upon the President and his chief associates. The votes of Louisiana, Florida and South Carolina were falsely certified, the return boards declared Hayes and the local tickets of his supporters elected, and then the mad partisans of what was once the honored Republican organization, declared that the law had decided the contest and that to question or resist was revolution.

For a time it seemed as if this consummating wrong might triumph. The nation was paralyzed by the audacity of the crime they called the sworn conservators of law and peace to give the country lawlessness and disorder, but the inherent patriotism of the American people has not been shorn of its omnipotence. Slowly but surely it has dissipated passion and prejudice, and strengthened the cause of right, until its majesty is now daily confessed by those who had been commanded to bow before the altar of fraud. It did not come in the tempest of revolution or in the mutterings of intestine strife, but it came like the genial rays of the sun which gradually pierce the mists of the morning and make the noon-day gladness. It has called out the reserve power of a free government—the inexorable might of right, and its mandate is now heard reechoed in countless modulations from the Senate to the homes of the land. And like the ceaseless dropping of the water that wears away the rock, one by one men of authority come to renew their vows to law and peace. In South Carolina and Florida the courts are hastening to set the seal of judicially administered justice upon the lies that their return boards would clothe with the power of truth and dignity with the color of authority. In Louisiana the courts are the children of fraud—the creation of Grant and Kellogg, as their blotted records abundantly testify, and Justice has no temple where they dwell; but men who cradled Republicanism and wove for it the brightest chaplets it has

But the inheritor into his balance throws only—pleasure. The one, values it by what it cost him; the other, for what it will purchase. Like the prodigal in the Scripture parable, he thoughtlessly expends it to gratify the caprice and cravings of his nature. Then comes the last scene—the misery, the remorse, and the long and wearisome journey back to the home of frugal industry. But there are other prodigals. Onward favorites our bounteous parent, Nature, has lavished her richest treasures—health. But the prodigal values it lightly, for it cost him naught, and recklessly squanders it in riotous living. Present pleasure obscures future woe. Soon the curtain rises on the last scene. We see him helpless, impoverished—the rich treasure of body and mind all lost—in misery and despair. Remorseful Conscience holds up to him the mirror of memory. In his own reckless folly he perceives the cause of his present pain. He resolves to return. The journey is long and tedious, but if he persevering follows the right road, he will at length see the haven of his hopes in the distance, and Nature, sowing her invalid child afar off, will come out to meet him, and receive him back with love and blessing.
