HYMN to the SUPREMACY

RE-AT- God, whose Power o'er Heav'n and Earth
Goes forth, and all things live, and all things die;
Whose eye o'erlooks us, and whose Wisdom guides;
Deal me that Portion of Content and Rest,
That unknown Peace, and Health that suits me best:
Save me from all the Guile, and all the Pain,
Which Lust of Pleasure brings, or Thirst of Gain,
In Trial fix me, and in Perils lead;
Guard from protect me, guard my Patience, and
That sweet Satisfaction teach me to impart;
Transport to feel!—Benevolence of Heart,
Each home felt Joy, each public Duty lend;
Make me, and give me, all Things in a Friend,
But most protect and guard me in a Maid,
Not rashly bold, nor abjectly resign'd;
And Oh! when I feel every Virtue hide,
When Error blinds, and Prejudice misleads,
Alike thy Grace, alike thy Truth impart;
Bears on my Soul, and triumph o'er my Heart;
Thy Word, O God, my Science and Delight,
Talk of my Day, and Transport of my Night;
There taught, that he who suffers is but try'd,
And he who wanders still may find a Guide;
Sanction with Truth, Reward with Virtue join;
Life without End, and Laws that reach the Mind;
Thrice happy he, who such a Guide can take;
For God hath spoken, and God will not forsake.

A LACHAPPELLE

THE extraordinary preparations, which for many days have been in much talk of at this place, for St. Louis, have ended in nothing more than a grand dinner, which the Count de St. Severin this day gave, and that lasted four hours, at which not only the foreign ministers, but a great number of officers from the garrisons of Lisbon and Macao, and particularly the regiment of Normandy, assisted. Every body expected that the feast of the house would have been finely illuminated, and that some pipes of wine and bottles of beer would have been given to the populace; but the people were disappointed, there was nothing of all this; for as for the illumination, it only consisted of about twenty tallow candles, artfully enough fixed under the arch of the gate of entrance, which served to give light to the tables, and to the people, which was the unlucky case of many that were there. As to the entertainment itself, it was splendid, and set in a vast number of silver dishes, the fashion and fine taste of which excited the admiration of all that were present. There were moreover about 40 Swiss soldiers, which his excellency had caused to be brought, as well to carry in the dishes, as to keep good order. The feast passed over very joyfully, and ended with a sort of ball, to which every body of fashion was well received. There only wanted one thing to render this great day illustrious and never to be forgotten, which was the publication of the peace, which of there was not so much as a single word spoken; and this shows that it is not much nearer than the evacuation of the conquered places. There were some people however, weak enough to lay wagers, that after dinner was over, all the plenipotentiaries would repair to the town-house, in order to confer there, for some small time, and that afterwards the peace would be published upon the beating of kettle drums and sounding of trumpets. The Count de St. Severin lies here in the most perfect intelligence, and conscious as heretofore to have secret and mysterious interviews

From the Paris Herald, September 1847.
According to letters from Genoa, of the 11th inst., the motive which induced the Duke of Richelieu not to consent to the release of the Austrian officers, who were prisoners of war in that city, at the request of General Nesselrode, was the fear of granting the same license to the four hostages of the republic, who have been so long confined at Milan, notwithstanding the pressing occasion they are under of returning home for the recovery of their health.

These letters add, that the correspondence between that city and Lombardy remains still suspended. The ceremony of crowning the Doge has been performed, thus with the usual solemnity. The government has decreed, as to reform three regiments in its service, but in such a manner that all the private men have been incorporated into other battalions, which were very much weakened. The advices from Spain say, that the Austrians were by little and little quitting the dominions of the republic, and that the English consul, who had retired during the troubles to Leghorn, was preparing to return to Genoa, where the public tranquillity is now perfectly restored.

Two ordinances of the king have been lately published, relative to the reform of the troops, the first of which reduces to four companies the regiment of royal Cantabrians, which consisted of six; the rest of that ordinance contains the same form, with respect to the officers and the Hussars, that was inserted in those formerly made public.

The second reduces to twelve companies each, all the following regiments, viz: that of the Comissary general, Royal of Poland, Dauphin, Penitence, Charente, Gironde, La Vielleville, Mangrove, La Rochelle, Orléans, Toulon, Dampierre, and Descent de St. Louis.

His majesty, who has been over since Monday last at Chantilly, will return this evening to Versailles.

From the London Gazette, 1847.
Paris, Dec. 10. The reform of the troops begins to be put in execution, for ten of each company in the French and Swiss regiments of guards were dismissed yesterday; and two ordinances have been published, dated the 21st inst., the one enjoining a battalion in each of the regiments of Lincolns, Dauphin, Segur, Royal Volontaires, and La Charente to be disbanded; and the other, dated the 1st inst., ordering that the light arm'd troops of the Gironde, which consist together of 1500 men, should be reduced to 800, of whom 200 are to be horse. Those of Morbihan and Artois Volontaires, consisting also of 1500 men each, will be reduced to 800, of whom 200 are to be foot and the rest horse. The foreign regiment of Gironde, of 1500 men, will also be reformed, and 400 of them are to serve as foot, and the rest as horse. The Hessian regiment of Fletcher will likewise be reduced to 800 men, of whom 200 are to be foot, and the rest horse.

Newcastle, Sept. 10. Notwithstanding it has been said in the public papers, that the justice of the several counties had reported to the privy council, that the distress amongst the landed gentry had entirely ceased, we have to inform our readers, by a letter from Barton upon Trent, that the distress has broken out all over there, and rises with as much violence as ever.

LONDON

Sept. 10. We hear that a plan for building a new palace at St. James is drawn, and will be presented to his majesty for his approbation, when it returns to England.

We hear that the crews of 24 men of war will be paid in full pay, but discharged, but receive part of payment, in order to keep them in his majesty's service.

The White House, that a Quarantine of three weeks has been imposed upon the coming from the Levant, occasioned by the apprehension they are under from a contagious disease, which was imported a ship at Alexandria, and from which 2000 men were taken.

ral other places. The same letters say, that they have an account from Constantinople of the deposition of several great ministers, and that the fermentation among the populace still continues.

Sept. 13. They write from Paris, that several Goldsmiths and Jewellers are employ'd by the court in making up a great variety of rich curiosities, which are to be disposed of in presents at the coming marriage of a daughter of France with the prince of Piedmont, and on the arrival here of her sister from Spain in her way to Italy. Those letters likewise say, that King Stanislaus is much indisposed since his return to Lunenburg, whither the queen has sent two of her physicians to attend him. The authors of some lampoons, that have been spread upon a very numerous ecclesiastical promotion which his most christian majesty has lately made, have been imprison'd and it is thought will be very severely punish'd. So dangerous a thing is it to have war in a country govern'd by seignior.

The great business of setting at liberty the Dutch prisoners of war in France, is said to be entirely adjust'd, and that they have receiv'd notice to hold themselves in readiness to march at a day's warning. The Abbe de la Ville will return to the Hague, in order to resume the functions of his ministry about the beginning of October, when it is said that a new Dutch ambassador is expected at Paris. The royal lottery lately open'd there goes on but slowly, most people that have money, shunning rather to employ it in trade, as that begins to become very dull on the prospect of the approaching peace, and the great demand for French manufactures in different parts of Europe.

They write from Liege, that all the light-arm'd troops of France, in that neighbourhood, are in full march for Avannes, between the Sambre and the Meuse, where they are to be review'd by the inspector-general, and reform'd, pursuant to the instructions that he has already receiv'd from the French court. It is believ'd, that a great part of them will be pick'd up by the German officers that are recruiting in those parts for different powers, and those that do not enter into foreign service are to have passports and money given them, in order to return to the places of their former abode.

Several merchants at Amsterdam have receiv'd advice, that the new company form'd at Venice, for promoting the trade of the north, have resolv'd to prosecute that scheme with the utmost vigour; and that, besides a large ship, freighted for Peterborough, which has already pass'd the sound, they are actually equipping four others, that will speedily sail for Hambourgh, Danzig, Copenhagen and Stockholm, with all sorts of rich commodities and manufactures from Naples, Florence, Leghorn, and other parts of Italy, and large quantities of goods from the Levant.

Our letters from the Hague, by the last mail, are not so sanguine as formerly, with respect to the speedy signing of the peace; but, on the contrary, suggest that as a resolution has been taken to leave nothing to be adjust'd in a future congress, this will necessarily occasion a considerable delay in discussing a great variety of important points, that were not formerly judged requisite to be adjust'd by the definitive treaty. These letters likewise say, that it is thought not a little strange there, to see so many ministers from different courts repairing to Aix la Chapelle, while at present there is no talk of a minister plenipotentiary from that of Berlin; and they likewise observe, that the last letters from Vienna say, that the count de Podewils is gone to meet his master in Sicily, and that the departure of count Chotack, for Berlin, is a thing as yet not absolutely settled.

On Friday last a man for a trifling wager, undertook to drink a quart of brandy, as an alehouse in Puckthorp in Northamptonshire, by a quarter of a time; he drank six without seeming to be affected with it; but whilst he was drinking the seventh, he fell down, was taken speechless, and continued so till five o'clock the next afternoon, and then died, leaving a wife and children behind him.

A few days since the following act of barbarity was committed in St. George's fields. A young woman servant to Mr. Holli, a shop-merchant in Tonley-street, having had leave from her mistress to go and see some friends in Holborn, in her return home, was met by three rogues, about nine in the evening, who ravish'd her; and one of them proposed murdering her to prevent a discovery, which being over-ruled by the other two, he assisted from, but, in return, committed the most shocking and indecent of indecencies. This unfortunate young woman lay in this condition above an hour before she was discover'd, when she was carried home, and the next day sent to St. Thomas's Hospital, where she died of her wounds. Before she was laid in the coffin, Mr. Hammond and Justice Clark attended her, when she gave the above account on oath. Two of the above villains are taken up, and committed to the new jail; and the third, who is a clerk to a brewer, is since absconded; but it is hoped that he will be taken, and brought to condign punishment.

On Saturday night last, just before eight o'clock, as Mr. Fletcher, junr. a vinegar-merchant in Goodman's-fields, was coming up the road to Whitechapel, he was stop'd near the mouth by three fellows dress'd like sailors, who knock'd him down, beat and abus'd him in a very barbarous manner, and rob'd him of his gold watch and a sum of money.

Yesterday a fellow went into the fields and crows on Millbank, Westminster, and stole wet linnen out of the garden; he was immediately pursued, taken, and carried to a coffee-house in bridge-street, where he endeavour'd to escape by jumping out of a window; but he was again re-taken, and carried before Thomas Ellys, Esq; and committed to the Gatehouse. He prov'd to be one Cartwright, a stone Sawyer.

Extract of a Letter from Bremen.
I take this opportunity of sending you a melancholy account of the mischiefs done here by the locusts, which has been carefully collected, and upon the truth of which in every respect you may very safely depend.

On the 20th of August an incredible multitude arriv'd at Lamberdorf, in the Bernstadt; there they formed in a column, and taking flight about noon, continued their passage for four hours over the forest of Minchen. These insects having pass'd the Oder, settled about the country of Ohlau; and after eating up every thing that was to be found at Rothland and Beckeren, they continued their passage again to Jelsch.

On the 23d another swarm of these devouring creatures came from Patishkan to Ober Schreimbendorff, where they fell upon two gardens, and ruin'd every thing that was in them. As they were a little straiten'd in their quarters, they lay one upon another in heaps, to the height of one's knee; and being driven from thence, they eat up all the grass in the meadow, and even all the rushes and reeds about the village of Deutsch Jackel: And from thence they continued their flight to Hoben Giersdorf, where they destroy'd several fields of buck wheat. As yet we have no farther account of the excursions of this body.

A third prodigious swarm pass'd in the evening of the 22d by Zinckel. On the 23d they fell about Lofdorf; on the 24th they pass'd by Schonbrun, Prieporn, and Sieneshoben, and at length took up their quarters in the village of Datzdorf, where they lay one upon another a full quarter of a yard high, taking up a quarter of a league in length, and about half that space in breadth. All the fruits of the earth that are not got in, as well as the grass, reeds, and in short every green thing, is totally destroy'd. They tried at first to drive them away with poles, but to no purpose. At length somebody very luckily thought of beating a drum; upon which they immediately took flight, but settled soon after upon the trees in the forest, from whence they were driven by the same means.

They made their retreat by Munsterberg, and then pass'd thro' the country of Glaz into Bohemia, where they had committed dreadful devastations on the lands of count Wallis. These insects are about the length of one's finger, and of all colours, grey, green, yellow, black, red and brown. Some people pretend to say, that each of these bands has a captain of a most enormous size; this is certain, that they leave behind them an intolerable stench. Some of the inhabitants of the county have observ'd, that they make holes in dry earth, about the depth of one's finger, where they lay their eggs; which the peasants are endeavouring to destroy, by double plowing their land.

It is very remarkable, that the same evening they quitted Lamberdorf, three great swarms of winged ants call'd by the same name, as if they had been in pursuit of them. Some people were foolish enough to endeavour to stop them, but as this drew the whole swarm upon them, they were quickly weary of that sort of diversion.

There is an account that Honor Capello, ambassador from the republic of Venice, with his lady, returning home through Switzerland, was attack'd by near 300 Swiss soldiers, who were deserters from the French army, and rif'd of their effects: No hurt was done to their persons, but he lost his excellency's servants, as they had made some resistance, were kill'd, not having been heard of.

There is advice from Antigua, that there is great plenty of French goods at that and other islands; that the inhabitants of Maricao are in a starving condition, and that their East India ships were sail'd for France.

St. JOHN'S Antigua, September 23.

On Tuesday arrived his majesty's Ship Centurion, commanded by Capt. Tyrrel, from a short cruise, having taken, on the 6th instant, to the Northward of Sombrero, a Spanish Ship of about 200 tons, bound from the Havana to St. Thomas, and sent her into St. Kitts. Her loading consists of Indigo, Logwood, Fustick, Tobacco, and Hides, and some Tortoise Shell, with about 2000 dollars, which were concealed in a beef barrel. This, it is supposed, is one of the last prizes taken this war in the West Indies; and that by a commander, remarkable for his good conduct and great success in taking the ships of the enemy, during the whole war.

Cap. Blincoe, who sailed from this place about six weeks ago, bound to Maryland, was taken a few days after, and carried into Porto Rico.

ANNAPOLIS

Last Thursday Night and Friday Morning we had a violent Westerly Wind (which succeeded a great Rain), that has done considerable Damage, especially in the Country; having blown down many Houses, and killed several Negroes. In Town it blew off the Roof of a large new unfinished House, and did other Damage.

We hear from Cecil County, that a malignant kind of Small-Pox, and Phlegm, are very rife there, and carry off great Numbers.

A FABLE.

The Lawyer and Justice.

OVER! then dyest good below,
 Thy pure delights few mortals know!
 Our rebel heart thy sway disown,
 While tyrant lust usurps thy throne!

The bounteous God of nature made

The sexes for each other's aid

Their mutual talents to employ,

To lessen ill, and heighten joy.

To weaker woman he assign'd

That soft and gentleness of mind,

That can, by sympathy, impart

Its likeness to the roughest heart.

Her eyes with magic pow'r endow'd

To fire the dull, and awe the rude.

His rosy fingers on her face

Shed lavish ev'ry blooming grace,

And stamp'd perfection to display.

His mildest image on her clay

Man, active, resolute, and bold,

He fashion'd in a different mould.

With useful arts his mind inform'd

His breast with nobler passions warm'd.

He gave him knowledge, taste, and sense,

And courage for the fair's defence.

Her frame, resistless to each wrong

Demand's protection from the strong.

To man the files, when fear alarms,

And claims the temple of his arms.

By nature's author thus declar'd

The woman's lov' reign, and her guerd.

Shall man, by treach'rous wiles invade

The weakness, he was meant to aid?

While beauty, given to inspire

Protruding love, and soft desire,

Lights up a wild fire in the heart,

And to its own breast points the dart,

And to the spoiler's base pretence

To triumph over innocence!

The wolf, that tears the tim'rous sheep,

Was never for the fold to keep;

Nor was the tiger, or the pard

Meant the besieg'd traveller's guard!

But man, the wildest beast of prey,

Wears friendship's semblance, to betray

His strength against the weak employ'd,

And where he should protect, destroys.

Fast twelve o'clock, the watchman cry'd,

His brief the tedious Lawyer paid

The all-prevailing fee for high

The earnest of to-morrow's fee

Sudden the furious winds with

The jarring elements mix'd a fury

The doors admit a hollow sound

And rattling from their hinges bound

When Justice, in a black robe, came

Reveal'd his radiant form to them

The wretch with shivering horror shriek'd

Look on my face, and tell me, what

Not having been in the court,

Or found her mention'd in reports,

He said, with faint and trembling voice

Her error, and when she came

Stare'd the whole room a blank reply'd

A criminal, how her virtue dy'd

Can it thou be doubtful who I am?

In justice grown so strange a name

Were not your courts for justice rais'd?

Two there, of old, my stars bestride

My guardian thee did I elect

My sacred temple to protect

That thou, and all thy venal tribe

Shou'd spurn the goddess for the bribe!

Aloud the ruin'd clients cries,

Justice has neither ear nor eyes!

In foul alliance with the bar,

Gaunt me the judge denounces war,

And rarely issues his decree

But with intent to baffle me

She pau'd. Her breast with fury burn'd

The trembling Lawyer thus return'd

I own the charge I justly laid,

And weak the excuse that can be made

Yet search the spacious globe, and see

If all mankind are not like me

The gown-man, still'd in robb'd lies,

By faith's false glass deludes our eyes,

O'er conscience rides without control

And robs the man to save the soul

The doctor, with important face

By fly design, mistakes the case

Prescribes, and spins out the disease

To trick the patient of his fees,

The soldier, rough with many a scar

And red with slaughter, leads the war

If he a nation's trust betrays

The foe has offer'd double pay

When vice o'er all mankind prevails

And weighty int'rest turns the scales,

Must I be better than the rest?

And harbour justice in my breast?

On one side only take the fee,

Content with poverty and thee

Thou blind to sense, and vile of mind!

Th' emperated slave reform'd!

If virtue from the world is flown

Will other's frauds excite thy own?

For sickly souls the priest was made

Physicians, for the body's aid

The soldier guarded liberty

Min' woman, and the lawyer me

If all are faithless to their trust,

They leave not thee the less unjust!

Henceforth your pleadings I disown

And bar the sanction of my name

Within your courts it shall be read

That justice from the law is fled.

She spoke, and fled as shades her face

Till Hallowe'en took her into grace

Paris, Sept. 6. It is reported that marshal Saxe has demanded 15000 men of the king, for an important expedition; which, it is said, will not interest the powers that were heretofore at war.

Vienna, Sept. 7. It is affirmed that the king of Great Britain has caused representations to be made to this court, tending to engage it to desist from some pretensions, which 'tis said hinder the signing of the definitive treaty. It is not known what answer the empress queen has given thereto; but every body is persuaded, that her Imperial majesty is well disposed to contribute all she can to accelerate the general pacification.

Chambery, Sept. 15. The Infant Don Philip is making preparations for his departure. Two days after that prince left the castle of Rochetta, it was reduced to ashes by lightning. 'Tis reported that the marriage of the king of Sardinia with the duchess dowager of Guastalla, will soon be accomplished without any ceremony; and that of the duke of Savoy with madam Victoire of France, will be deferred 'til after the peace.

Paris, Sept. 30. According to letters from Genoa, dated the 17th, it appears, that the Piedmontese and Austrians begin to draw off from the frontiers of that state: But the latter, as they retire, redouble their vexations at Parma, Piacenza, and Guastalla, for the payment of the exorbitant contributions they have demanded there; which is look'd upon as a sign, that they are soon entirely to quit the country.

According to some late letters from Leghorn, the Genoese mountaineers lately fell upon a party of the French, their professed friends, and had entirely destroyed them all, if a body of Imperial Croats had not flew to the succour of the latter, and fell upon the Highlanders, putting many to the sword, and taking abundance of prisoners.

The last letters from Constantinople inform us, that three foreign powers began in the month of April last, to intrigue in the seraglio and the divan, in order to force the grand segnior to take part with them against the House of Austria and Russia; but having found his highness immovable in the principles he had hitherto acted upon, they spirited up the different insurrections which appeared in the months of June and July, the object of which was to dethrone the grand segnior, and place upon the throne one of the sons of his brother.

The Spaniards have already embarked 140 of their invalids for Barcelona whither it is pretended the rest of their troops will follow successively: except the corps destined to accompany the Infant Don Philip into Lombardy.

Warsaw, Sept. 18. Letters from Podolia say, that they have received advice from Constantinople of a great revolution in that capital, on occasion of which the Grand Segnior had been dethroned, and his nephew set up in his room. They add, that the Tartars disliking the Cham which the Porte had appointed them, openly refused to acknowledge him, and had elected another among themselves.

Paris, Sept. 27. The young pretender has hired the hotel of St. Paul, on the Theatins quay, and will remove into it the first of October; from whence we conjecture, that the British court does not insist upon his being sent out of this kingdom, or else that his majesty has refused to gratify them in this point. It is currently reported, that the king has bought up several English men of war, and is desirous to take into his service all the English seamen that are discharged.

Madrid, Sept. 27. The departure of madam of France, consort to the infant Don Philip, is fixed for the beginning of October.

We have the disagreeable news from Barcelona, that several transports which were bringing over from the island of Majorca, part of the regiment of Ireland have had the misfortune to be taken by three large Barbary pyrates. There were on board these transports twenty officers and one hundred soldiers, with their wives and children. The passage between Majorca and Barcelona being so short, the government neglected to order a man of war or frigate to convoy these transports.

Cracow, August 30. Public prayers have been put up in all the public churches of this diocese, to beg of heaven a deliverance from the dreadful plague of locusts; and many of our people, both rich and poor, are already vowing that they will go in pilgrimage to our lady of Loretto, and St. James of Compostella, if nothing else will rid us of those insects; nay, we are making intercession with the whole host of Heaven, both ancient and modern saints, being resolved not to lose our suit for want of mediators and intercessors. We hear from Zamora, that a great swarm of those insects having approached that town, they set all the bells a ringing, and made a great noise in all the adjacent fields with frying-pans, salt-boxes, butter-tubs, and firing pistols, &c. by which means they soon frightened them away: But soon after a larger swarm appearing, the same method was tried in vain; the locusts divided into two bands, one of which continued their flight towards Wilncsic; but the other desisting the noise, would not stir, 'til they had laid some fields quite bare; and the next morning they followed the first division. This second swarm has been followed by a third much more numerous, having taken up above three hours in flying by the town.

L O N D O N.

Sept. 7. The Saltee rovers, and indeed most of the galleys belonging to the pyratykal states in Barbary, have taken advantage of the decline of the French marine, to make prizes upon their coasts of Spanish and Italian vessels, two of which they were lately so hardy as to cut out of the road of St. Tropez; upon which two frigates are sitting out at Marseilles, which are to cruise upon those coasts, in order to oblige the corsairs to keep their distance, in pursuance of treaties, by which they stipulate not to come within ten leagues of the shore. It is whisper'd at Marseilles, that as soon as the peace is concluded, satisfaction will be demanded for those insults.

The conduct of the prince stadtholder at Amsterdam has been so equal and judicious, that neither party have had the least cause to complain, his highness having entered that city without guards, to shew his confidence in the good affections of the burghers; and having obliged them, during the time their dispute with the magistrates was in hearing, to pay them all the respects due to their quality and offices, which gave them the highest satisfaction: Nor were there any changes made in the regency, 'til each of the members had made a free resignation, and declared himself willing to submit to any regulation that his serene highness in his great wisdom should be pleased to make, pursuant to the full powers granted him for that purpose, by their noble mightinesses the states of Holland and West Friesland.

Sept. 8. It is generally expected, that in the ensuing session of parliament, a very strict enquiry will be made into the conduct of the governors of some of our colonies, in order to discover the true source of that spirit of dissatisfaction and distraction, with which they have been disturbed of late years, to the so small detriment of the affairs of their mother country, as well as their own. Such an enquiry will probably correct all past mistakes, or at least produce a law, prescribing such rules as may prevent them for the future; and thereby hinder English planters from removing to Surinam, or any of the French islands.

Several grave politicians think, that our ministers are too forward in lessening our strength both by sea and land; but as to the return of the Russians, it is as much owing to the representations of the king of Prussia, as to those of his most Christian majesty; the former having declared, that if the French attempt to draw any advantage from this step, he will immediately join the Allies with double the number of his own troops. And this is the true reason why the Prussians are every where in motion.

We learn from Stockholm, that the health of his Swedish majesty continuing still in a state of great uncertainty and fluctuation, the commission has been renewed, which enables three senators, who are in constant attendance, to sign all papers of state in his majesty's name, which are likewise countersigned by the secretary.

Letters from Paris, of the 15th instant, N. S. assure us, that the marriage of the prince of Piedmont with the French king's third daughter, will be shortly declared at court; and that whatever becomes of the definitive general treaty, they depend upon a peace with the court of Turin.

They write from Bruges, that troops daily pass through that city, all taking the route of Dunkirk, Calais, &c.

An Extra of a Letter from Stockholm, in English, dated August 27.

"On the 23d of July we had here a most prodigious storm of thunder and lightning, with the most violent men ever seen, occasioned by a cloud bursting, which in two hours time raised our river fifteen or twenty yards perpendicular, which has done incredible damage, at least 10,000, by which several families are ruin'd: It has destroyed almost all the corn on the river, from Waley bridge for several miles downwards; and not only ruined the corn and grass, but the land for ever. Several people lost their lives; several houses, cottages, wind-mills, and other buildings, were taken down: Abundance of fine timber was carried down the river, hay, and a great many sheep. Two women who were sisters were drowned in a little rivulet, in which ordinarily there does not run more water than would drown drown a kitten. At Hensfield, a parish church about four miles above us, it washed the church-yard bare to the rock, and took several people out of their graves; so there were found next day hung in bushes and trees a corpse in one place, a coffin in another, a shroud in another. It has took down several stone, county, and other bridges, with all the walls and fences, for miles, and made a dismal destruction. We have had very bad harvest weather hitherto, by which a deal of corn is damaged, but now we have good weather."

BOSTON, November 28.

We hear from Annapolis-Royal, that on the 28th past, capt. Gorham, with 10 men and paddles, went to the east of the harbour in St. John's river, and capt. Prebble and capt. Davis, commander of the Warren, with 5 oars-men, went to the westward of the harbour, to make discoveries; and going ashore, were fired upon by the Indians, and one of capt. Prebble's men shot thro' the body, who died three days after; two of capt. Gorham's men were also kill'd, and three wounded. Capt. Prebble also narrowly escaped with his life; for seeing one of the Indians presenting his gun at him, at about 80 yards distance, he step'd behind a small tree, in the center of which the ball lodged directly against his body. He immediately return'd the fire with a brace of balls, as did capt. Davis, which he hopes did execution: After which they retreated safely to the boat, and returned to the vessels. They took two of the enemy, and brought them with them; one of whom is said to be son to one of the chiefs, who afterwards made his escape.

ANNAPOLIS.

On Monday Evening last died, at his Plantation near this City, after a tedious Indisposition for above seven Months, in the 51st Year of his Age, Capt. Ezekiel Gillet, one of the Gentlemen in the Commission of the Peace for this County, in which Capacity, as well as that of a Husband, Father, Master, Friend, and Neighbour, he acted as became a Christian.

We have had a very severe Spell of cold Weather for almost a Fortnight past, which has quite froze up all our Rivers, and fill'd the Bay to full of Ice, that the like has not been seen since the hard Winter eight Years ago.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

WEDNESDAY, January 18, 1749.

An Extract of a private Letter from the HAGUE, dated September 13.

"We grow more and more impatient, as the time seems to draw near, to see the French evacuate our fortresses. It looks as if they would not very soon have an opportunity of coming by them at so cheap a rate; a resolution being taken to keep the troops of the republic always complete, and to use our utmost endeavour to draw the most experienced officers from all parts into her service. We are very solicitous to know in what manner our barriers are to be settled, which is a point of the highest consequence to the state. In all probability it will be to the full as strong, tho' not so extensive as before, and that care will be taken to secure such a district to each fortress, as that the revenue arising from it may defray the charge of the garrison; at all events, we shall not charge ourselves as before, with the joint jurisdiction over, or defense of places.

The commissioners in Friesland find themselves a good deal embarrassed, the populace being extremely irritated against their superiors. Some of their deputies appearing before the commissioners, and being checked for proceeding in so rough a manner with their governors, one of them made answer, My Lords, granting it to be as you say, (tho' upon examination you will find it to be otherwise), we have only desired this for a few weeks as they have treated us for many years; that is, without justice, lenity, or humanity. The middle sort of people however are more tractable, and provided they are not reduced again under the dominion of their former lords, they seem ready enough to submit to whatever can be reasonably imposed upon them; so that we hope all disputes there will be very quickly composed.

It is beyond all doubt, that after the peace is made, and all things settled here, a calm and impartial enquiry will be made into the management of civil and military affairs, for several years last past, in order to discover how the republic came to be loaded with such immense debts, while our fortresses were suffered to run to ruin, our troops were incomplete, and our naval power diminished quite away; and all this at a time when the private subjects of the republic were exceedingly rich, and more especially those who were concerned in the great farms, or had the direction in any shape of the finances. Some say that his serene highness, as prince and holder, will soon after his return from Amsterdam make a tour to Deventer, so that his journey to Bremen seems to be laid aside.

Vienna, September 1. Her Imperial majesty has ratified the sentence pronounced against Byron, a French, by which he is condemned to pay 15000 florins to the inhabitants of the duchy of Silesia; and all the costs of this tedious and expensive suit, which some say will amount to 200,000 florins; besides which he is to forfeit all his honours, and be imprisoned for life, with an allowance of only 2000 florins per year. The short history of this extraordinary person, who has made so much noise in the world, is this: He is a native of Schavonia, and descended from a noble family, to which he has added his great honours. At the age of sixteen he was obliged to leave his country for a murder, and some other little crimes of that sort; upon which he went first into the Polish, and then into the Russian service; where, by his intrepid courage, he raised himself to the rank of a major, which however he did not think proper to accept, but returned him to an account for some excesses he had committed, and for which he was sentenced to be hanged; but that too they thought too severe a punishment; for if justice had then taken place he must have lost his life. Upon his return into Hungary, he put himself at the head of a small body of men in desperate attempts, and with them did a great deal of mischief. Upon the breaking out of the war he obtained a pardon, and entered in a new imperial military service, in which, to do him justice, he behaved with much bravery; but after pillaging without mercy in Silesia, Moravia, Bohemia, and Bavaria, he thought himself at liberty to treat the subjects of his sovereign as he treated his enemies, and committed such a variety of violences as brought complaints from all quarters; so that nothing but her majesty's clemency could have enticed him to so mild a sentence as that which he has received. He is said to have amassed, by these means, a fortune of better than two millions.

Amsterdam, Sept. 6. The chevalier Offorio, minister from the king of Sardinia, has just received an express from his court, with orders to set out forthwith for Aix la Chapelle, and assist at the pacific conferences, in quality of his plenipotentiary. It is thought his excellency will set out next week, and we hope no farther delays will be thrown in the way, upon pretence of waiting for instructions.

Brussels, Sept. 8. The government has received orders from court to reform the new battalions raised last year, which have not served this campaign; but no time is fixed in the ordinance published for this reform.

Amsterdam, Sept. 8. The vessels that were built last year at Rapolmond, have been sold to a Dutch merchant for 100,000 livres, together with a great quantity of timber, and other materials for ship building.

Amsterdam, Sept. 6. They have made out at the war-office a list of the regiments that are to be disbanded, pursuant to the convention of the 2d of August, within a month after we shall have received the news of the Russian troops being marched back to their own country. Hitherto the court has not received any private advices of their returning home; nor have the powers, with whom that convention was concluded, notified in form the return of those troops.

The plan of the definitive treaty, as drawn up at Aix la Chapelle, by our minister and those of the Maritime powers, has been communicated to the duke de Huescar, the Spanish minister, who has sent it by an express to Madrid; and we are in great hopes that it will meet with his most Catholic majesty's approbation.

We are assured that the king will visit the frontiers of his dominions next spring; which we are not backward to believe, because if the war continues, he will make the campaign of a field; and if a peace be concluded, 'tis probable he will divert himself during the first season.

Paris, Sept. 11. An ordinance of the king has been published concerning the militia; and as his majesty is resolved to send them back immediately into their respective provinces, and is desirous that this corps, which has rendered him important services, as well in the field, as in garrison, should be kept up. This ordinance contains the several regulations, which are to be observed for that purpose, in regard to the manner of their return, the advantages they are to receive in their respective professions, and several rights and privileges, which his majesty has been pleased to grant them.

As the court has received the news of the entire evacuation of the duchies of Parma, Piacenza, and Guastalla; and of the infant Don Philip's having left the army, in order to go and take possession of those dominions, the king has thought fit to name a part of the lords and ladies who are to go and receive the infant upon our frontiers, and who are also to accompany that prince into her own dominions.

month, and that the army under his command will not separate, till the infant don Philip is quietly seated in his new territories.

Naples, Sept. 13. A few days since the king's galley seized on the coast of Sicily, a Barbary private boat, which had greatly infested those coasts. Last week the squadron of Maltese galleys anchored a second time at Gela, and two of them were dispatched to Baie, to take on board an hundred criminals, condemned to the galleys for life, of whom the king has made a present to the grand master of Malta.

Hamburg, August 31. There has been an edict published in Sweden, prohibiting afresh the use of either gold or silver in apparel; and enjoining, that all Swedish subjects, tho' in foreign countries, be obliged to observe the same ordinance, both with regard to their own persons, and the liveries of their servants, &c.

St. de Chapelle, Sept. 12. The ministers plenipotentiary continue to have private conferences; but it seems as if nothing definitive would be done till the return of the plenipotentiaries of the States General, and the arrival of the count d'Olivero, the Sardinian plenipotentiary. Expresses are also still expected from Vienna and Madrid. As there are many points to settle, and the treaties of Westphalia, Breda, Nimeguen, Ryfwick, Utrecht, and the quadruple alliance, must be consulted, as the basis of the new treaty, a great deal of time must be spent before all matters are adjusted.

Vienna, Sept. 4. Mr. Keith, whom his Britannic majesty has appointed to succeed sir Thomas Robinson, arrived here from Hanover the 1st instant. Two grand conferences have been held at court, wherein the plan of a new barrier for the republic of the United Provinces was deliberated upon. According to which, it will be formed of the towns of Dendermonde, the citadel of Antwerp, of Mechlin, and of the territory which extends from that place along the Dyle, the Lieck, and the Old Demer, as far as Maastricht, terminating at the Maaze. In this case, Archon, Sichen, and Diet, will be fortified.

Amsterdam, Sept. 4. When the deputies of the merchants had the honour of an audience of the prince stadtholder, the chief of the deputation made a very fine speech, telling of their great affection for his person, and for his royal comfort, and all his illustrious family; and recommending to his care and attention the interest of their colonies, the protection of their navigation, and the encouragement of their manufactures, &c.

His serene highness answered them with that natural affability and eloquence which charm every body. After having thanked the merchants for the honour they did him (expressing himself in that gracious manner), he assured them of his inclination and continual attention towards every thing that might tend to advance commerce, which he looked upon as the life and soul of the prosperity of their city, &c. The many important affairs which had required the presence of the stadtholder in this city having been happily determined, his serene highness set out this day for the Hague, attended with the acclamations and benedictions of the inhabitants, the air resounding with expressions of sincere acknowledgements. The streets through which his serene highness passed were lined with a double row of burghers under arms, having their captains and other officers at their head; and the prince's coach was preceded by two deputies of each of the sixty companies of burghers, who marched four and four abreast.

Warsaw, Sept. 7. Advice from Lithuania imports, that six miles from the city of Wilna there have appeared several large swarms of locusts, which have devoured every thing that they found in the fields; and that so large a quantity of them passed over the town of Minski, that during five days together they appeared like a thick cloud over that city; and it is added, that they have eaten up all the corn and grain as far as Mohilow, and the Dnieper, so that the inhabitants are reduced to great want.

St. Petersburg, Sept. 9. There is a talk here of an exchange being made between the empress queen, and the king of Sardinia, whereby the city of Savoy, and its territory, will be yielded to that prince for the northern part of the Novorossia, and the place of land which extends along the left side of the long Maizeur and the Tello. The notion of this exchange is confirmed by the great quantity of ammunition and military implements, which have lately been transported from Savoy to the castle of Mainz.

Paris, Sept. 16. They write from Madrid, that the king has settled a plan for the reform of his troops, that it will not be put in execution till the spring is signed; and that the forces which are in Italy will soon return into the kingdom of Spain; they are supposed to be at present in motion, and are to return from Italy by the way of Languedoc and Rouillon, and from thence into Catalonia.

Petersburg, Sept. 5. It is said the duke de Byron, late duke of Courland, and his lady, will be set at liberty, and released in his former duchy. One men of war was in the port, are ordered to be laid up at Cronstadt.

Genoa, Sept. 26. We have been advised from Corsica, that the person called Mastra, head of the rebels, having failed in his enterprise against the town of Palodella, had been abandoned by the greater part of his people, and was retired into the Pieve of Valeria, without any appearance of rallying his party; so that it was hoped that the rebellion in Corsica, every day losing strength, would soon be entirely suppressed.

Vienna, Sept. 14. The establishment of the new barrier of the United Provinces, seems to be one of the principal subjects of the deliberations of this court. The question is not only what cities and places shall form this barrier, but the extent of the districts which shall depend on them, the revenue arising from which is to be appropriated towards the maintenance of the garrisons of those places.

L O N D O N

Sept. 15. The great business of setting at liberty the Dutch prisoners of war in France, is said to be entirely adjusted, and that they have received notice to hold themselves in readiness to march at a day's warning. The Abbe de la Valle will return to the Hague, in order to resume the functions of his ministry, about the beginning of October, when it is said that a new Dutch ambassador is expected at Paris.

There is certain advice from Santa Cruz, that the plague in the empire of Barbary, hath for some time raged to such a violent degree, that thousands have died thereof.

Sept. 17. The Genoese have sent a minister to the court of Turin, in order to recover the favour and friendship of his Sardinian majesty; and 'tis believed they will send a person of great distinction to the court of Vienna, in quality of ambassador extraordinary to her Imperial majesty, for the like purpose as soon as the peace shall be concluded.

Sept. 22. Letters from the Low Countries take notice, that the generals of the Allies and the French have entered into concert with each other, upon exterminating several bands of thieves and vagabonds, deserters from both armies, which infest the interjacent countries.

They write from Vienna, that on the 8th instant, N. S. in the evening, her Imperial majesty was delivered of a prince, which died soon after it was baptised.

The master of a Swedish ship arrived at Leghorn from Algiers reports, that four Portuguese ships, laden with sugar, &c. were carried into that place by their crews, and that the crews consisted of 120 men.

Yesterday the board of ordinance ordered 14 new pieces of cannon to be sent to Languedoc, near Narbonne, which had been repaired for that purpose.

They write from the Hague, that it is hoped the new power granted to the stadtholder, for changing the magistracy in the several towns of the provinces of Holland, will have all the good effects which were hoped for from them; and that the public tranquillity being once restored, proper measures will be taken to remove any errors that may have crept into the government, and redressing any grievances that may have happened in its administration.

We hear that the right honourable the earl of Holderness will go ambassador to the States General.

A new man of war of 60 guns, is to be launched this day at Deptford, and is ordered to be immediately rigged, victualled, and manned, for sea service.

Sept. 26. Yesterday at noon, a waggon, very heavily laden with chests and barrels of money, came to the Bank from Deal, guarded by a company of soldiers, for the use of the merchants of this city. The money came in the Sherness man of war from Lisbon.

The Merlin loop of war is ordered to be fired out, and dispatched with fresh orders to the governor of Cape Breton.

We are assured that no messenger arrived last Tuesday, with the copy of a plan for a general pacification (as was intimated in some of the news papers) but that there was an account coming to a foreign minister, that Mr. Churchill was the day appointed for the signing the treaty of peace.

They write from Madrid, that union have been receiving there, for some time past, for the service of the empire, during the winter season; that count Lowenthal is gone to Madrid, and that the completion of that march is postponed.

They write from Constantinople, that advice from different parts of the empire continues to affirm, that the subjects of the emperor's emperor's journey into Bohemia is the execution of an arrangement, by which the dignity of King will be transferred to his Imperial Majesty, and the last prejudice to the disposition established by the Pragmatic sanction.

From Palermo mention a frightful sea monster, which had been discovered floating near the coast, so large that six men pair of men had been employed to draw it upon land.

NOTICE.
Just now arrived here a billander from Plymouth, who brings us news, that on the 25th of October O. S. a peace was proclaimed at London, with France and Spain: Our vessels are daily going in and coming out of their ports; a free trade being granted. Also that Pondicherry and Madras are taken from the French. His Majesty was not yet come from Holland, but the festival of the peace was put off till his arrival, which was every moment expected; can't learn any further particulars.

Wednesday, January 25, 1745

From the Journal of Captain James Oglethorpe, Esq. of the Ship the Lenox, which was taken by the Spanish Admiral, and sent to the Havanna, on the 28th of September last. The following is a true and exact Account of that Action as given by the Public: in order to supply that Difficulty in your next, I have sent you the following.

Admiral Knowles, with the Ships, the Cornwall, Tilbury, Canterbury, Stratford, and Oxford, having been cruising for some time between the Tortuga bank and Cape Canaveral, in order to intercept the Gallies and Ships coming from La Vera Cruz to the Havanna, was joined on the 28th of September at night, by the Warwick (whom when we first chased her, we hoped had been one of them); and on the 30th about noon the Lenox, and her company join'd us. Capt. Holmes informed the Admiral of his being chased the day before by eight sail of Spanish men of war, (two by the bye they proved but seven), who took one of his company, and might easily have taken him and all the rest, had they not been politicians: Upon this intelligence, the Admiral made a signal directly for all captains; and informing them, I suppose, of the news, we were ordered to get all our ships clear, and prepare for battle.

In the evening the Admiral cruised over for the Cuba shore, and by day-light next morning fell in with them: when a signal was made for the line of battle, which we steamed very expeditiously, and then tack'd and stood after them.

The dons at first bore down upon us; but after making us plain, ran away as fast as they could; but we tracked after them with all the sail we could set, till they were at the Lenox she met with us, or she and all her company would have been gone). By noon our headmost ship got away near within random shot of the enemy, but was oblig'd to stop for our sternmost to come up; and then after it fell almost calm, and proved but little wind the rest of the afternoon.

At three o'clock, or thereabouts, the Spanish vice-admiral hoisted a Spanish flag at his main top-mast head, and began to engage the Stratford and Tilbury, as did the two ships ahead of him (one of which was a rear-admiral); but our Admiral thinking us too far off, as indeed we were, for both our shot and theirs fell short, made the signal to come to a closer engagement, and bore down upon them near half an hour himself, without firing a gun: till all the sternmost Spanish ships kept pelting at him. When he got near and began, the Cornwall look'd like H—ll, for she vomited nothing but fire and smoke: In about an hour and a half she beat the vice-admiral out of the line, and set him a burning; but the Stratford and she had made one of the ships strike to them before (this prize we have taken), but like a rascal he hoisted his colours again, because no boat went on board him.

Next the Admiral followed the Lenox, then the Warwick and Canterbury, agreeable to the line, who took up the sternmost ships as they came up with them: The Oxford the Admiral turned out of the line, and sent her to assist the Tilbury: I suppose, because he saw the Spanish Admiral turn that dog Garriacochee, who has done so much mischief out of their line: tho' he fired at the Stratford and Cornwall too; but ran away like a thief when his Admiral ran, so indeed they all did; but what vexed me most, was to see that rogue Sir Mark Fretter get clear off, for we wanted much to have hang'd him.

Just as the Spaniards began to run, our Admiral had his main top-mast shot by the cap, and his fore-top sail yard had been shot down some time before, and the yard hung like a Welchman's dagger; so that the Cornwall could not pursue the fugitives: But the signal was pulled down for the line, and made to chase to forward; and immediately we stood after them. The Canterbury and Stratford got up with the vice-admiral, and beat him to rags; for he had all his masts and his rigging for near the three, we were oblig'd to leave him for fear of being above ourselves. It was extremely dark, but by the firing we saw several of our ships engaged, till near ten at night, when the fighting ceased, and they all stood off. Two days after we espied the vice-admiral's ship at an anchor, in a small bay to windward of the Havanna, as near as a thief in a mill; however our active Admiral found him out, and went to with a design to burn her; but luck being in the trouble, for when we got within gun shot, they set fire to her, and a caliginous smoke she made, the rest I ever live in my life, she burnt an hour, and then blew up: They had not time to save their dead and wounded, so that they were all consumed in her, to the number of near 3000 men, women and children, and all the prisoners from the Conquistadore, where we found the other four ships got in much trouble, their rear-admiral's top masts were all shot away, and we burnt by the boats which went ashore, we had killed six captains, three of ships, and three of soldiers; for they were as full of soldiers as they could crowd, tho' those I saw on board the prize were men of war: But the best joke was, those fellows were to have carried us into the Havanna; they may thank their fate that carried them four there; for had day-light lasted but two hours longer, we'd a had every den of them.

When our Admiral lost his top masts, and could not follow the fleet, he bore down to the Conquistadore, as the lay like a wreck, and we all thought he was going to board her, and cut the dunnage to pieces, for holding their colours again; but he only fired a broadside or two at her when he got close to her, and she struck directly, and cry'd out for quarters, tho' I'll pity they had any. Just as the prize struck, there was a sea ship coming to help her; but the Cornwall gave her such a dose, she turn'd upon her back and wheel'd off, for her top masts, and ran for it as fast as she could.

The next day we met a Spanish ship from Cuba, going to the Havanna, who told us of the news: I cur'd him for coming in our way; for we should have gone and taken all the Gallies alive, and been as rich as princes: I'm sure we deserv'd it; for we liv'd as short allowance all the cruise, and but two quarts of water a day to make it hold out, in hopes of meeting them (but short allowance of grog was worst of all); and now we have brought this prize here, we are told she will be given up to the Spaniards again; so we have fought them for nothing.

Indeed we took a polacco from Canthago, with some money on board; but that's but a bad campaign to what we expected.

The Spaniards compute their loss at about 1000 men killed and near as many more wounded, whilst ours do not exceed 100: And they had the superiority by 20 guns, and 1500 men.

THE letters from Genoa of the 24th instant import, that the suspension of arms has been published in Corsica even with the rebels, and that it is made for six months. And the republic hath sent thither General Belin, with power under the king's auspices, to make some accommodation: it is presumed these Islanders, not to expose themselves to the king's resentment, at a time when his majesty will have it in his power to crush them at once, will at last submit to their obedience, it is only to be wished their submission may be sincere and durable, of which we cannot easily persuade ourselves.

According to some letters, every thing continues in a state of perfect tranquillity; except that the republic herself is a good deal uneasy. The subsidy of 250,000 livres a month, which was granted her by France, is entirely ceased; whereas the Genoese feared themselves that this subsidy would have continued to the end of the year. Affairs are at present in such a situation, there being nothing to fear from enemies; that it was thought the payment of this sum might very well be dispensed with.

Spain. Madrid 14. The British minister here has informed England with eleven men of war; and had left rear admiral Sir John with six more of sailing to visit in the Mediterranean. He will be fully equipped; and will be ordered to give the infant Don Philip the oath of his succession, his granted that four regiments to garrison the Kingdom of Parma, Piacenza, and Guastalla; besides a million of soldiers, to defray the expense of his military operations, and to continue him grand admiral of Spain, and in all his commandments.

London 17. On Thursday the Lords, Judges of the Regency met at the Cockpit, Whitehall, and took into consideration the number of foreign troops proper to be disbanded at this juncture; the determination of which point his royal highness the Duke of Cumberland is to carry with him to Flanders.

We are informed, that the principal occasion of his royal highness the Duke of Cumberland's coming over, was to consult the lords of the regency, for disbanding some regiments; and we hear, that leniency will not be regarded, but those who believed with the greatest gallantry will be kept on foot.

We have certain advice from Kendal, in Westmoreland, that some of the Locusts have made their appearance in that part of the country; but we hear of no damage they have done in the northern counties.

On Friday a farmer, sent coming to town, with several persons in it, by some accident overturn'd at Highgate; which had such an effect on the last who drove the cart, whose mischance was in it, that he cried out, O! I have kill'd my mother! and died immediately of the fright. The persons in the cart received no hurt.

Sept. 12. Yesterday orders were given for taking into pay several officers, who have been lately discharged from his majesty's service, to be put on all expedition some ships that were laid off.

The same day the Bedford of 80 guns, and the New York of 64 guns, were put in commission.

Private letters from some parts of Italy say, that a new treaty is on foot between the courts of France and Spain, and the republic of Genoa, for maintaining the latter in a state of independence for the security of which, subsidies are to be granted to that state, which may enable her to perfect the fortresses which are already begun in different parts of her dominions, and to keep on foot a body of 10,000 regular troops in time of peace. It is also said, that some other Italian states will be induced to accede to this alliance.

On Thursday there was a report, that all the officers were ordered to their posts in Great Britain and Ireland; and those officers were given in consequence of some advice received from the court of Madrid.

Sept. 17. It is said, that the reason why the court of Spain has delayed the signing of the peace, is on account of a Spanish register ship of great value, which was cut out of a harbour in Portugal some time since, and carried to New-England, which they think on having restored, or the value.

Sept. 16. Some millions have been paid to count Maurepas, to be employed in building arsenals, and other large establishments, and daily expected from Holland to pay the Dutch prisoners debts, and the officers are afterwards to obtain passes to return home.

Sept. 8. We have an account from Hanover, that the emperor has accepted the guaranty of Spain, by which the chief obstacles are removed which related to the peace.

Sept. 25. According to letters from Vienna by yesterday's mail, it is decided that the Russian troops shall quit the winter in Poland, and that they are to be quarter'd in the circles of Silesia, Brunsvick, and Koenigsberg, till the return of the spring enables them to continue their march.

It is confidently asserted, that the definitive treaty is signed, and that it will speedily be made public.

NEW-YORK.

December 5. We are inform'd from New-Jersey, that one of the leaders of the rioters having been committed to jail at Newark, a number of these people came to the jail on Monday night last, and let him out; and he afterwards made his way, then a strong north-west wind blew the door off the hinges, and he walk'd out of prison as Paul and Silas did.

He is now at his prayers, from the time he gets out of bed till he repairs to his study; and it is the opinion of some of the health of his body; and of some learned divines, that it is not but the appearance of the well-being of his poor soul!

Nay, his own old associates who went a privateering with him, swear he would have shew'd better chance for a fair wind to the haven of rest, and would have come to port with a safe safety, had he continued still aboard! These are a set of old dogs, to talk so profanely of faith's subject.

A FABLE.

The Wolf, the Goose, and the Lamb.
DUS Y demands, the parent's voice
Should satisfy the daughter's choice
To choose belongs to his alone.
May horror seize his midnight hour,
Who builds upon a parent's power
And claims, by purchase, wife and bed.
The laughing maid for his embrace
Wrote verse, wrote fiction, and the brag
While poets had but her downy neck
Became the troubled seat of care,
And pass with anguish, and despair.
A Wolf, rapacious, rough and bold,
Whose nightly plunder thus'd the fold,
Commencing his ill-nest life,
And boy'd with thirst, would take a wife
His parents known, the savage race
In num'rous crowds, attend the place
For why, a mighty wolf he was,
And held dominion in his jaws,
His mother the whole pack mother brought,
And humbly his alliance sought;
But told by age, or else too nice,
None found acceptance in his eyes.
It happen'd, as at early dawn,
He solitary trod the lawn,
Sung'd from the fold, a slender Lamb
Skip'd waltz by her fleet Dam;
When Cupid, for to man and beast,
Discharg'd an arrow at his breast.
The dam'rous breed the robber knew,
And trembling o'er the meadow flew;
That nimble speed the Wolf o'ertook,
And courteous, thus the Dam bespoke.
Silly, foolish, and suspend your fear,
That me no enemy is near;
These jaws, in slaughter oft imbred,
At length have known enough of blood;
And kinder business brings me now,
Vanquish'd, at beauty's feet to bow.
You have a daughter—Sweet, forgive
A Wolf's address—In has I live;
Love from her eyes like lightning came,
And set my marrow all on flame;
I let your consent confirm my choice,
And ratify our nuptial joys.
My ample wealth, and pow'r attend,
Wide o'er the plains my realms extend;
What midnight robber dare invade
The fold, if I the guard am made?
At home the shepherd's car may sleep,
While I secure his master's sheep.
Discourse like this, attention claim'd;
Gaze'd the mother's breast inflam'd;
Now hush'd by his side she walk'd,
Of settlements, and jointures talk'd;
