

THE HERALD.

Princess-Anne, Md.

TUESDAY MORNING, MAY 22, 1838.

Our readers will perceive that this paper has been very much enlarged. The press is now, and will be, in charge of the editor, we think it may safely promise our subscribers as neat and handsomer a sheet, as is to be found in any village in the country. We shall earnestly labor to make this paper, not only the medium of disseminating orthodox political doctrines, but of communicating also interesting and valuable information on all subjects within the range of a newspaper. Great efforts will be made to have it regularly forwarded to subscribers. These will be objects steadily kept in view—how far we shall succeed in accomplishing them, must leave to time, and the public, to determine. The professional duties of the editor, we repeat, will be attended to, as usual. These will be no account whatever, to be forsaken, or in anywise neglected.

One-third more matter will now be furnished our readers by this paper, than they receive in the old form, while the price remains the same. When this circumstance, together with the improved appearance of the paper, is taken into consideration, it is confidently expected, that all will either pay in advance, or not hesitate to comply with the prescribed terms, if they do not. We have endeavored to be explicit, in order that mistakes hereafter may be avoided.

For sundry miscellaneous matters—see 4th page.

We have received two numbers of a new penny paper styled "The Whig," published in the city of Baltimore, by Messrs. Bull and Tuttle. We cordially wish success to all Whigs, in general, and to that "Whig" in particular.

William Robinson has been appointed Post master, at Kingston, Somerset county, Md.

Treasury Note Bill.—The Bill authorizing an issue of the Treasury Note was passed by the House of Representatives at ten o'clock on Wednesday night, of a very unusual debate. The vote upon its passage was, yeas 162—nays 99.

Every bill will be of his post to-day, in the Court House, at half past 3 o'clock, P. M.—No common circumstance should detain a man from this meeting. The eyes of the State and the country are upon us. Let us proceed to appoint our delegates to the Convention; let us speak about our opinions of the miserable EXPERIMENTERS at Washington, and our keen sense of the frightful injuries they have inflicted upon this country. Let them not be spared—they have not spared the people! Remonstrances—petitions—applications have been offered up to them in vain. Now let them hear the deep tones of your honest remonstrance. We think we know something of the firm and manly temper of the Whig of Somersett; and we are much mistaken, if they do not, like this day, Mr. Van Buren and his followers, find themselves in distress, almost beyond precedent, and quite beyond endurance, and this in the face of all Mr. Benton's predictions, and sleepy speeches to the contrary. In short, he finds Benton to be an ardent upholder in finance, as ever Madison was in religion.

But every bill will be of his post to-day, in the Court House, at half past 3 o'clock, P. M.—No common circumstance should detain a man from this meeting. The eyes of the State and the country are upon us. Let us proceed to appoint our delegates to the Convention; let us speak about our opinions of the miserable EXPERIMENTERS at Washington, and our keen sense of the frightful injuries they have inflicted upon this country. Let them not be spared—they have not spared the people!

The people pay the Banks, and the war of the Government upon them is really hastened, the Banks can, and will pay their debts. This is just the sum of a substance of the whole case. Let the Banks put but little faith in the hollow profession of Mr. Van Buren, and his followers, of the people, and their ability to fulfil all their promises, and some specie payments, when they can do so, safely. He who expects of them more than this, whatever he may possess, is too lightly apprised with the subject for his opinions to be entitled either to respect or belief.

From the Herald.

I have ready for you publication in your paper, an Editorial notice of the Kingston Hall School, which appeared in the last number of the People's Press. It is a just tribute to the high character of that female Seminary, which I have long considered unsurpassed in moral and intellectual advantages, by any institution in the country; and I comitally urge with the Editor of the Press that his success may be commensurate with his deserts.

A FRIEND TO MERRY.

May 18, 1838.

We have but little attention to the card of Miss Carroll in this day's paper. It will be found that the course of study pursued in her School, embraces a large portion of the moral and physical education, that every branch of useful knowledge. We cordially rejoice to learn that it is in a prosperous condition, and we hope, by the addition to the stamp of the Board of Education, that our young candidate for our office, who thinks it a great honour to mention to the four steps of such a chump!

High-handed fraud and forgery.—The Baltimore Chronicle of last Tuesday morning says, there was great excitement in that city on the day before, created by the discovery of extensive forged papers, prepared by Mr. Wm. B. Brownell, a merchant, to whom of suspected integrity and of high character. It appears that he had been in the habit of supplying himself with money, by drawing notes with forged names as endorser, and depositing them as collateral security, for the repayment. Mr. Brownell, we learn, has forged the name of many highly respectable merchants of this country, to notes of large amounts. As far as we can ascertain, he has committed forged upon the following persons, and has committed forged upon our candidate for our office, who thinks it a great honour to mention to the four steps of such a chump!

On Mr. Samuel W. Jones, of this place, for two notes each, $2,000

On Mr. Marcellus Jones, at White Haven, for, 3,000

On Mr. Tondyne, of Salisbury, for, 300

And on Messrs. Frenzy & Parsons, at Salisbury, Mrs. Wm. & John Gunby, Furtown, Mr. Levin Cooper, of Annapolis, and others, for sums of which we have no record, the respective amounts; but the whole is said to be upwards of ten thousand dollars.

This criminal and desperate expedient, it is said, was resorted to by the wretched man, with a view of maintaining his tottering credit, and under the unauthorised hope, that some unforeseen good fortune would enable him to meet the debt by maturity, and thus destroy the evidence of his guilty conduct. How vain—how fatal the delusion! Ingenuity and artifice only serve for a time to express the voice of crime, but it is a wise and a noble maxim of Providence, that it seldom fails, either to the Scribes or the Pharisees, to teach the world, that such unforeseen good fortune would enable him to meet the debt by maturity, and thus destroy the evidence of his guilty conduct. How vain—how fatal the delusion!

It is a wise and a noble maxim of Providence, that it seldom fails, either to the Scribes or the Pharisees, to teach the world, that such unforeseen good fortune would enable him to meet the debt by maturity, and thus destroy the evidence of his guilty conduct. How vain—how fatal the delusion!

Now comes the trial of strength, and the combat, when the two parties are to be tried in the court of law, and the decision is to be given, whether the transgressor is to be punished or not.

An account of a mob in Philadelphia, will be found in another column of our paper of to day

Books.—We noticed the fact, that the books of New York and Boston had received special payments. Several of the New England institutions have followed suit, and it is supposed a general regulation may be looked for, at no distant day. If any confidence could be placed in the new-born friendship of the national administration for the banks; if there could be any sort of security given, that they would be of a competent and faithful journeyman at the hands of the officer, we think it may safely be assumed, that this is their right to expect, and their duty to extend, then there would be no difficulty about resuming. It is true, that the stupid and sanguine warfare, so long and so fiercely waged by the "illustrous professor," and the "glory enough" successor, against the monied institutions of the country, and through them, open the people, seems at length to cease, at least for the present. Mr. Secretary Woodbury writes to New York, that the Executive proposes to exert all its legitimate power to induce the Bank of the American People, and those connected with it, to resume their specie.

DEPARTURE OF THE GREAT WESTERN.—Yesterday was a day for New York. After a violent East wind, the waters of the bay, called by a fresh Westerly breeze, and abating in the bright sunlight, were agitated by one of those striking scenes, which can scarcely be described, except as a grand picture of the ocean. A fleet of twenty steamships, numerous small vessels, and naval craft, assembled to witness the departure of the great Atlantic steamer, which a vast proportion of the population of a great city, and with a vast amount of treasure, had embarked in her, to cross the Atlantic, and return home again.

House of Representatives.—We copy the following from a very able and interesting article in the New York Evening Star, on the subject of the financial operations in London, of Mr. Judson, the agent of the Pennsylvania Bank of the United States. It satisfactorily explains, what before was similar to us, the frequent arrival at New York, of such immense amounts of gold and silver. We hope none will be delayed by the length given to the following extract from the American.

THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE.—The departure of the steam ship Great Western, on Monday last, on her return to England, was an occasion of extraordinary interest to the people of New York. All the journals of that city received full reports of the arrival of the Bank of England and the Bank of the United States, and we will this auspicious event as pregnant with the most important results to the commerce and trade of this great and growing country. Enough for to-day.

From the N. Y. Evening Post, a V. R. paper.

Our National Treasury is at its less; the last dings are falling from it day by day, only seven thousand dollars, according to the statements of Messrs. Wright and Combebridge, are left—all the remainder of that golden fleet, which two years ago, was rushing into it continually?

S. S. The Government journals have at last, after a violent East wind, the waters of the bay, called by a fresh Westerly breeze, and abating in the bright sunlight, were agitated by one of those striking scenes, which can scarcely be described, except as a grand picture of the ocean. A fleet of twenty steamships, numerous small vessels, and naval craft, assembled to witness the departure of the great Atlantic steamer, which a vast proportion of the population of a great city, and with a vast amount of treasure, had embarked in her, to cross the Atlantic, and return home again.

Books.—We copy the following from a very able and interesting article in the New York Evening Star, on the subject of the financial operations in London, of Mr. Judson, the agent of the Pennsylvania Bank of the United States. It satisfactorily explains, what before was similar to us, the frequent arrival at New York, of such immense amounts of gold and silver. We hope none will be delayed by the length given to the following extract from the American.

DEPARTMENT OF THE GREAT WESTERN.—Yesterday was a day for New York. After a violent East wind, the waters of the bay, called by a fresh Westerly breeze, and abating in the bright sunlight, were agitated by one of those striking scenes, which can scarcely be described, except as a grand picture of the ocean. A fleet of twenty steamships, numerous small vessels, and naval craft, assembled to witness the departure of the great Atlantic steamer, which a vast proportion of the population of a great city, and with a vast amount of treasure, had embarked in her, to cross the Atlantic, and return home again.

House of Representatives.—We copy the following from a very able and interesting article in the New York Evening Star, on the subject of the financial operations in London, of Mr. Judson, the agent of the Pennsylvania Bank of the United States. It satisfactorily explains, what before was similar to us, the frequent arrival at New York, of such immense amounts of gold and silver. We hope none will be delayed by the length given to the following extract from the American.

THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE.—The departure of the steam ship Great Western, on Monday last, on her return to England, was an occasion of extraordinary interest to the people of New York. All the journals of that city received full reports of the arrival of the Bank of England and the Bank of the United States, and we will this auspicious event as pregnant with the most important results to the commerce and trade of this great and growing country. Enough for to-day.

From the N. Y. Evening Post, a V. R. paper.

Our National Treasury is at its less; the last dings are falling from it day by day, only seven thousand dollars, according to the statements of Messrs. Wright and Combebridge, are left—all the remainder of that golden fleet, which two years ago, was rushing into it continually?

S. S. The Government journals have at last,

after a violent East wind, the waters of the bay, called by a fresh Westerly breeze, and abating in the bright sunlight, were agitated by one of those striking scenes, which can scarcely be described, except as a grand picture of the ocean. A fleet of twenty steamships, numerous small vessels, and naval craft, assembled to witness the departure of the great Atlantic steamer, which a vast proportion of the population of a great city, and with a vast amount of treasure, had embarked in her, to cross the Atlantic, and return home again.

Books.—We copy the following from a very able and interesting article in the New York Evening Star, on the subject of the financial operations in London, of Mr. Judson, the agent of the Pennsylvania Bank of the United States. It satisfactorily explains, what before was similar to us, the frequent arrival at New York, of such immense amounts of gold and silver. We hope none will be delayed by the length given to the following extract from the American.

DEPARTMENT OF THE GREAT WESTERN.—Yesterday was a day for New York. After a violent East wind, the waters of the bay, called by a fresh Westerly breeze, and abating in the bright sunlight, were agitated by one of those striking scenes, which can scarcely be described, except as a grand picture of the ocean. A fleet of twenty steamships, numerous small vessels, and naval craft, assembled to witness the departure of the great Atlantic steamer, which a vast proportion of the population of a great city, and with a vast amount of treasure, had embarked in her, to cross the Atlantic, and return home again.

House of Representatives.—We copy the following from a very able and interesting article in the New York Evening Star, on the subject of the financial operations in London, of Mr. Judson, the agent of the Pennsylvania Bank of the United States. It satisfactorily explains, what before was similar to us, the frequent arrival at New York, of such immense amounts of gold and silver. We hope none will be delayed by the length given to the following extract from the American.

THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE.—The departure of the steam ship Great Western, on Monday last, on her return to England, was an occasion of extraordinary interest to the people of New York. All the journals of that city received full reports of the arrival of the Bank of England and the Bank of the United States, and we will this auspicious event as pregnant with the most important results to the commerce and trade of this great and growing country. Enough for to-day.

From the N. Y. Evening Post, a V. R. paper.

Our National Treasury is at its less; the last dings are falling from it day by day, only seven thousand dollars, according to the statements of Messrs. Wright and Combebridge, are left—all the remainder of that golden fleet, which two years ago, was rushing into it continually?

S. S. The Government journals have at last,

after a violent East wind, the waters of the bay, called by a fresh Westerly breeze, and abating in the bright sunlight, were agitated by one of those striking scenes, which can scarcely be described, except as a grand picture of the ocean. A fleet of twenty steamships, numerous small vessels, and naval craft, assembled to witness the departure of the great Atlantic steamer, which a vast proportion of the population of a great city, and with a vast amount of treasure, had embarked in her, to cross the Atlantic, and return home again.

Books.—We copy the following from a very able and interesting article in the New York Evening Star, on the subject of the financial operations in London, of Mr. Judson, the agent of the Pennsylvania Bank of the United States. It satisfactorily explains, what before was similar to us, the frequent arrival at New York, of such immense amounts of gold and silver. We hope none will be delayed by the length given to the following extract from the American.

DEPARTMENT OF THE GREAT WESTERN.—Yesterday was a day for New York. After a violent East wind, the waters of the bay, called by a fresh Westerly breeze, and abating in the bright sunlight, were agitated by one of those striking scenes, which can scarcely be described, except as a grand picture of the ocean. A fleet of twenty steamships, numerous small vessels, and naval craft, assembled to witness the departure of the great Atlantic steamer, which a vast proportion of the population of a great city, and with a vast amount of treasure, had embarked in her, to cross the Atlantic, and return home again.

House of Representatives.—We copy the following from a very able and interesting article in the New York Evening Star, on the subject of the financial operations in London, of Mr. Judson, the agent of the Pennsylvania Bank of the United States. It satisfactorily explains, what before was similar to us, the frequent arrival at New York, of such immense amounts of gold and silver. We hope none will be delayed by the length given to the following extract from the American.

THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE.—The departure of the steam ship Great Western, on Monday last, on her return to England, was an occasion of extraordinary interest to the people of New York. All the journals of that city received full reports of the arrival of the Bank of England and the Bank of the United States, and we will this auspicious event as pregnant with the most important results to the commerce and trade of this great and growing country. Enough for to-day.

From the N. Y. Evening Post, a V. R. paper.

Our National Treasury is at its less; the last dings are falling from it day by day, only seven thousand dollars, according to the statements of Messrs. Wright and Combebridge, are left—all the remainder of that golden fleet, which two years ago, was rushing into it continually?

S. S. The Government journals have at last,

after a violent East wind, the waters of the bay, called by a fresh Westerly breeze, and abating in the bright sunlight, were agitated by one of those striking scenes, which can scarcely be described, except as a grand picture of the ocean. A fleet of twenty steamships, numerous small vessels, and naval craft, assembled to witness the departure of the great Atlantic steamer, which a vast proportion of the population of a great city, and with a vast amount of treasure, had embarked in her, to cross the Atlantic, and return home again.

Books.—We copy the following from a very able and interesting article in the New York Evening Star, on the subject of the financial operations in London, of Mr. Judson, the agent of the Pennsylvania Bank of the United States. It satisfactorily explains, what before was similar to us, the frequent arrival at New York, of such immense amounts of gold and silver. We hope none will be delayed by the length given to the following extract from the American.

DEPARTMENT OF THE GREAT WESTERN.—Yesterday was a day for New York. After a violent East wind, the waters of the bay, called by a fresh Westerly breeze, and abating in the bright sunlight, were agitated by one of those striking scenes, which can scarcely be described, except as a grand picture of the ocean. A fleet of twenty steamships, numerous small vessels, and naval craft, assembled to witness the departure of the great Atlantic steamer, which a vast proportion of the population of a great city, and with a vast amount of treasure, had embarked in her, to cross the Atlantic, and return home again.

House of Representatives.—We copy the following from a very able and interesting article in the New York Evening Star, on the subject of the financial operations in London, of Mr. Judson, the agent of the Pennsylvania Bank of the United States. It satisfactorily explains, what before was similar to us, the frequent arrival at New York, of such immense amounts of gold and silver. We hope none will be delayed by the length given to the following extract from the American.

THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE.—The departure of the steam ship Great Western, on Monday last, on her return to England, was an occasion of extraordinary interest to the people of New York. All the journals of that city received full reports of the arrival of the Bank of England and the Bank of the United States, and we will this auspicious event as pregnant with the most important results to the commerce and trade of this great and growing country. Enough for to-day.

From the N. Y. Evening Post, a V. R. paper.

Our National Treasury is at its less; the last dings are falling from it day by day, only seven thousand dollars, according to the statements of Messrs. Wright and Combebridge, are left—all the remainder of that golden fleet, which two years ago, was rushing into it continually?

S. S. The Government journals have at last,

after a violent East wind, the waters of the bay, called by a fresh Westerly breeze, and abating in the bright sunlight, were agitated by one of those striking scenes, which can scarcely be described, except as a grand picture of the ocean. A fleet of twenty steamships, numerous small vessels, and naval craft, assembled to witness the departure of the great Atlantic steamer, which a vast proportion of the population of a great city, and with a vast amount of treasure, had embarked in her, to cross the Atlantic, and return home again.

Books.—We copy the following from a very able and interesting article in the New York Evening Star, on the subject of the financial operations in London, of Mr. Judson, the agent of the Pennsylvania Bank of the United States. It satisfactorily explains, what before was similar to us, the frequent arrival at New York, of such immense amounts of gold and silver. We hope none will be delayed by the length given to the following extract from the American.

DEPARTMENT OF THE GREAT WESTERN.—Yesterday was a day for New York. After a violent East wind, the waters of the bay, called by a fresh Westerly breeze, and abating in the bright sunlight, were agitated by one of those striking scenes, which can scarcely be described, except as a grand picture of the ocean. A fleet of twenty steamships, numerous small vessels, and naval craft, assembled to witness the departure of the great Atlantic steamer, which a vast proportion of the population of a great city, and with a vast amount of treasure, had embarked in her, to cross the Atlantic, and return home again.

House of Representatives.—We copy the following from a very able and interesting article in the New York Evening Star, on the subject of the financial operations in London, of Mr. Judson, the agent of the Pennsylvania Bank of the United States. It satisfactorily explains, what before was similar to us, the frequent arrival at New York, of such immense amounts of gold and silver. We hope none will be delayed by the length given to the following extract from the American.

THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE.—The departure of the steam ship Great Western, on Monday last, on her return to England, was an occasion of extraordinary interest to the people of New York. All the journals of that city received full

