REHOBOTH THE MOTHER CHURCH

Miss Rachel Layfield, of Westover, Wins Old Home Prize at the High School

At the recent commencement exercises of the Washington Academy, Princess Anne, the Old Home Prize for the best essay was awarded to Miss Rachel Layfield, of Westover, Md. The essay has been highly complimented by Mr. John S. McMaster, who originated the prize and who is one of the chief contributors to the fund establishing it, and at his suggestion the essay is published in full below.

REHOBOTH, THE MOTHER CHURCH.

Amid this land of bays, inlets and streams, the little winding Pocomoke is one of the most beautiful rivers or the Eastern Shore, and of America; very deep, very winsome, almost tropical in its luxuriant verdure. It first welcomed the white man when Captain John Smith entered its waters in 1603. We next hear of it, when the first naval battle of America was fought upon its bosom, between Coulbourn's Virginia fleet and the pinnaces St. Margaret and St. Helen, in behalf of Lord Baltimore.

The territory bordering on this river had been included in the Virginia land grant, but King James I., a Catholic, desiring to establish a Catholic colony in the New World, had wrested it from Protestant Virginia and bestowed it upon his Papal Proprietaries. Through Providence, however, and the absence of her Proprietor, who, at this time was not allowed to leave England, because of the Civil War of 1642, Maryland was the first of the colonies to establish an Act of Toleration. In the course of a few years, therefore, this placid picturesque Pocomoke was to flow through the birthland of American Presbyterianism.

On the banks of this river, amid the murmuring pines and hemlocks, settled a few Scottish immigrants, one of whom, the most noted, was William Stevens, who settled on a plantation about four miles from Pocomoke and called his home "Rehoboth."

After a few years, these settlers on the Eastern Shore, near Virginia, were joined by others, and thus the settlement grew; until in 1666, they under the leadership of William Stevens, were united into a county, to which he gave the name of "Somerset," in honor of his sister, Lady Mary of Somerset.

This portion of Maryland, thus settled, may be regarded as the cradle of our Presbyterian Church. These settlers, now united in brotherly love, wanted the Gospel and they gathered from both sides of the river on the Sabbath to hear the teachings of the great Ordain William Fraell, who held his services in one of the square rooms of the Stevens' Mansion.

Later we find them assembling in a church, built of cypress logs on the corner of the Rehoboth plantation.

In 1680, the Presbytery of Laggan, Ireland, received a letter from Colonel William Stevens, a member of the council of the Province of Maryland, entreating them to send ministers to that colony. In compliance with this request, the great evangelist Francis Makemie came to them in 1683, and as the records show, he first sought the home of William Stevens. There in the neck of land between the Chesapeake and the Atlantic, sheltered by mild laws of a colony founded by a Roman Catholic nobleman, his great work began.

His first mission was to lay the foundation of the Mother Church, for as such she has been officially recognized by the Presbytery of New Castle and the Synod of Baltimore, although this honor has many times been refused her by her sister churches; Snow Hill, Pitt's Creek, Manokin, Buckingham and Rock-a-walkin. These were founded in Makemieland, of pure Scottish type, regularly organized. "Upon this land where our forefathers have trod, Makemie claimed and entailed this peninsula for God."

After seeing his churches well planted and flourishing, Makemie left Rehoboth under the tender care of her first local pastor Rev. Drummond and went into Virginia.

In infancy the church grew rapidly and soon reached the age of maturity. At this point, however, she slowly declined, her vitality grew low. Indeed, there was a time when the church had not a pastor of her own, and membership of less than twelve. Services were held only once or twice a month by

INDIAN GIRL DRIVEN FROM HOME AS WITCH

Elders Believe She Has an Evil Eye

Ogdensburg, N. Y., July 1.—Great has been the excitement in the little Indian village of St. Regis, near here, where the people have been living in dread of Lola Rosen, a native girl of fifteen, who is believed to possess an evil eye.

The Indians declare that Lola is a black witch, and that wherever she appears children get sick, dogs go mad, animals die and people's lives are made miserable. Medicine men have been unable to drive out the evil spirit.

The squaws told their children to avoid the witch girl, and warnings were given out not to let her shadow fall on any member of the tribe, nor on their live stock.

The chiefs finally decided that the girl must leave the tribe at once and she has gone to Lutere Mountain, where she has an uncle.

Lola is described as a bright and pretty girl, who cherishes the ambition of becoming a teacher of her tribe. It is believed that a few clever tricks performed by her at a school entertainment aroused feeling against her which ended in her being banished.

THREE DROWN IN WELL

Sister of Two Victims Tried to Rescue Them, But Failed.

Elizabeth, N. J., July 1.—Ludwiga Kosloski, twelve years old, crept into a newly dug cellar in Linden to try to rescue her younger sister, Mary, aged ten years; her brother, John, aged seven years, and another girl, Anna Petrovka, aged nine, who had fallen into an unused well in the center of the cellar and which was filled with rainwater.

Mary seized Ludwiga's hair, but was forced to release her hold, and the three children sank, their bodies being recovered later. The children were wading in the cellar to cool themselves. All of them lived in Linden.

Crack in Liberty Bell Growing.

Philadelphia, July 1.—Wilfred Jordan, the curator of the Independence Hall museum, is authority for the statement that the Liberty Bell ought not to be removed from its resting place again, as the crack has extended for more than six inches within the past few weeks, and that it shows signs of disintegration that may cause the relic to fall apart. No one knows just when this fissure began or what caused it.

22 Murderers at Sing Sing.

New York, July 1.—Three murderers will be executed in the death house at Sing Sing on July 8. They are Giuseppe Ciprelli, George Williams, a negro, and Zenta Santa. There are now twenty-two murderers in the death house in Sing Sing, the largest number of condemned men ever kept at that institution at any one time.

"Never Felt Better." Then Dies.

Northumberland, Pa., July 1.—Miss Ethel Snyder, champion tennis player and crack rifle shot, of this place, was on a porch at her home, when she remarked that she never felt better in her life. A few moments later she fell senseless and died from a sudden attack of heart failure.

busy pastors of other churches. The spark of light seemed on the verge of going out. But God has always sustained his Ezekiels and Nehemiahs, and the tiny spark was again fanned into flame.

This church has now outlived that age of neglect and still stands, with only a few alterations, the same as when first built in 1683, a small, plain, rectangular building of dark brick structure on the west side of the Pocomoke river. A lane of cedars from the main road leads up to a large square, surrounded by hitching rails, which is in front of the church. The graves of many of its ancient members, who await the Day of Resurrection, cluster around the old building.

Within is a wide hall, with a door at either end leading up two side aisles. The pews are of varnished oak, and the windows of stained glass. The choir occupies the right hand corner beside the pulpit.

Just now the church is being remodeled and the grounds are being beautified. She has a membership of over a hundred and a pastor of her own.

On the walls above the pulpit, is a tablet with an inscription as follows: To Francis Makemie, Father of the American Presbyterian Church, Rehoboth, His First and Favorite Child, Founded A. D. 1683. These Sacred Grounds Were Given by Stevens. He said: "Everything Should Tend Heavenwards."

FEAR A PROLONGED DEADLOCK NOW FACES THE DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION

CANDIDATES IN THE LEAD TO FIGHT TO A FINISH.

Leaders of All Camps Declare Their Choice Will Win the Nomination—The Conference a Failure

Hope of nomination on the twenty-seventh ballot for President was practically abandoned by Democratic leaders Saturday night. When the national convention adjourned for Sunday, it was believed that some solution of the long deadlock would result from conferences between the champions of the three leading candidates, but it developed that the time had not arrived for the withdrawal of either Speaker Clark, Governor Wilson or Representative Underwood.

Campaign managers possibly might have reached some agreement if interest in the deadlock had not been dwarfed by the personal controversy developed between William Jennings Bryan and Speaker Clark. The visit of Mr. Clark to Baltimore and his arrival too late to attempt vindication of himself before the convention overshadowed everything else was a subject of Sunday gossip.

On Saturday night the 26th ballot was reached when the vote was as follows: Clark 463, Wilson 307, Underwood 112, Foss 43, Marshall 40, Harmon 29, Bryan 1. The Maryland delegation was divided for the first time at the Saturday night session, Messrs. Joshua W. Miles, Congressman Covington, Emerson R. Crothers, Senator Rayner and John S. Young, changing their vote from Clark to Wilson. Up to this time the vote had been solidly 16 for Clark. The convention adjourned to meet at 11 o'clock Monday morning.

Speaker Clark had a conference with Mr. Hearst, Senator Stone, David R. Francis and others. Speaker Clark after the conference issued the following statement:

Callie Bryan a Traitor.

"In the national convention an outrageous aspersion was cast upon me, and through me, upon the Democratic party by one, who, of all men, ought to be the last to besmudge or betray his friends or his party. So far as I am personally concerned, it is enough to say that the charge which reflects upon my personal or party integrity is utterly and absolutely false. I might afford to forget myself, but I am by the choice of the Democratic majority of the house of representatives, the ranking official Democrat in national public life. I cannot be false or corrupt without reflecting upon my party in the most serious way.

"Any man who would enter into an alliance with any selfish interest of privileged class of this country to gain the nomination for the presidency, is unworthy of the presidency and of the speakership of the house. If I have not entered into such an alliance, then the Democrat, however distinguished, who wantonly charges me with this act is a traitor to the Democratic party and to his professed friendship for me.

"I am not here to plead for a nomination or to attempt to influence any man's political action. Let every man proceed in this convention according to his convictions and the expressed will of his constituents. I ask no undue consideration from any man, be he friend or foe, but I demand exact justice from every Democrat, either in this convention or throughout the nation. With William J. Bryan and his charge made in the convention the issue is proof or retraction. I shall expect him to meet that issue."

Bryan has issued a statement challenging Clark to say if there is a difference between Bryan and Parker Democracy and if Clark is willing to be nominated without Murphy and predatory interest votes.

Clark Injured Candidacy.

Party leaders generally took the position, notwithstanding the Missouriian's impassioned denial of Mr. Bryan's imputation that he was beholden to Morgan, Belmont and Ryan, that he would be unable to regain the votes he had lost. At the same time many of them thought that sympathy for Mr. Clark and the inevitable linking of Bryan and Wilson in the minds of the delegates, by reason of the New Jersey candidate having been the beneficiary of the votes turned away from Mr. Clark by the Nebraska's philippic, had injured the chances of Wilson's nomination.

The situation, as seen by leaders not associated intimately in the management of any of the campaigns now seems to be about as follows:

Clark having failed of nomination for seventeen ballots after receiving a majority vote, probably had reached the crest of his strength.

Wilson, although climbing steadily, apparently was bitterly opposed by delegates who resented the general impression that Bryan had the veto power, although he lacked the votes necessary to control the nomination.

These delegates believed that the New Jersey governor would continue to gain even to the point where he had a majority, but that he could not break down the Clark strength, which was said to be determined that Bryan should not win through a combination of any kind.

Should Clark and Wilson fall on the next two or three ballots it was predicted that there would be a turn to Representative Underwood, who had held his normal vote from first to last.

Bryan Starts "Something."

Late Saturday afternoon Mr. Bryan roused the delegates with another tirade against Morgan, Ryan, Belmont and all the privilege seeking and favor asking classes, while attacking by

Death of Mrs. A. S. Dougherty

Mrs. Annie S. Dougherty, wife of Mr. H. H. Dougherty, of Baltimore, died suddenly of heart disease Wednesday at Ohioville, N. Y., where she had recently gone to spend the summer. Mrs. Dougherty was a daughter of the late Judge John R. Franklin, of Snow Hill. Besides her husband, she is survived by two children, Mr. Harry R. Dougherty, of Peekskill, N. Y., and Mrs. Peter Hamilton, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and one brother, Mr. Henry Franklin, of Baltimore, and two sisters, Miss Florence Franklin, of Snow Hill, and Mrs. Chas. T. Main, of Oklahoma City.

Mrs. Dougherty was well known in Princess Anne, where she at one time resided when her husband, who is a brother of Mr. Z. J. Dougherty, was engaged in business here. She was very popular in social circles and was most highly esteemed.

The body of Mrs. Dougherty, accompanied by a number of relatives, was taken to Snow Hill Thursday night, funeral services being held Friday morning. Mrs. Dougherty was a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and funeral services were conducted by Rev. A. Allen, rector of All Hallows Church, Snow Hill, of which she had been a member.

Porter-Carter Wedding

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at Allen on Wednesday last when Miss Mary Letitia Porter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William T. Porter, of Loretto, became the bride of Mr. Orman Dallas Carter, of Cape Charles, Va. The wedding took place in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Allen.

The bride, who was charmingly attired, carried a shower bouquet of sweet peas. The bridesmaid, who was Miss Nora Stoll, of Brooklyn, Md., carried a large bunch of brides roses. Mr. Arthur B. West acted as best man and Mr. Levi H. Porter, brother of the bride, and Mr. Parran Jones were the ushers. The wedding march was played by Miss Allen. After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Carter left for an extended tour on which they will visit Buffalo, the Great Lakes, Niagara Falls, Pittsburgh, Harrisburg and Philadelphia.

The bride is well-known in Princess Anne. Last year she was the second assistant in the high school department of Washington Academy. Among those who were present at the wedding were Mrs. Jennie E. Jones and Miss Gertrude Flurer, of Princess Anne.

Pocomoke Bond Issue Held Up

Judge Robley D. Jones, of the Circuit Court for Worcester County, last week, granted an injunction against the Mayor and Council of Pocomoke City restraining the issue of $35,000 street improvement bonds authorized by the Legislature of 1912.

The bill for injunction was filed by Messrs. Thomas B. Walters, Abraham W. Camner and a number of other taxpayers of Pocomoke City through Attorneys L. Paul Ewell, of Pocomoke City; Miles and Myers, of Princess Anne, and John W. Staton, of Snow Hill. Irregularities in the advertisement for the sale of the bonds are alleged.

TEACHERS ENJOY A BUSY WEEK

A Large Attendance of the State Teachers' Association Seen at Braddock Heights

Last Tuesday night marked the opening of the forty-fifth annual convention of the Maryland State Teachers' Association which was one of the most important gatherings in the history of the association, and surely the largest in point of attendance.

President Wood delivered the annual address. Mr. Wood deprecated the fact that Maryland has not been more liberal with her public schools. Reports, he said, show that this State expends $15.30 for each scholar given instruction in the public schools, while Massachusetts spends $24. Maryland stands twentieth among the states of the Union in the amounts expended for educating its children. He advocated altruism in the schools, and said he desired a curriculum made to suit the average child of the average man.

Following the address of President Wood, all the teachers were invited to the Braddock Hotel, where they were tendered a reception by the members of the Frederick County Teachers' Association and the residents of Braddock. The visitors were received by S. Fenton Harris, president of the county association; Prof. Charles H. Remsburg, principal of the Girls' High School, Frederick; School Superintendent John T. White, Miss Pearl Eader, Miss Lillie Wiener, Adolphus Fearhake and Judge Hammond Urner, the latter two representing the Braddock colony. Folger McKinsey, of Baltimore, read several of his compositions at the reception and a thoroughly enjoyable evening was spent.

Meetings were held simultaneously at the hotel, auditorium and dancing pavilion. The first session was devoted to the work of elementary education, starting off with reading by Miss Helen Gover, of Columbia University. She was followed by a paper on directed language by Miss Emily Barnes, of Baltimore County. Literature was discussed by Miss Mary G. Davis, of Montgomery county, and Miss Mary A. Culen, of Queen Anne's county.

The feature of the rural education session was a symposium of rural school experiences by E. B. Fairson, Roslyn; N. Price Turner, Salisbury; S. S. Handy, Easton; Julian F. Walters, Brookville; Mrs. Isabel Jones, Brighton; Mrs. Blanche B. Cramer, Miss Isabel Staunton, Lovely, and R. H. L. Reich, La Plata.

All phases of teaching in country schools were related, and recommendations based upon actual experience were made. S. D. Gray delivered an address on the progress of agriculture in high schools of Maryland, and H. J. Patterson, of College Park, discussed the kind of education we need in rural schools. Prof. W. T. L. Tolliaferro, of the Maryland Agriculture College, delivered an address on "How a Knowledge of Live Stock May Be Taught in Rural Schools."

Dr. Stephens in an address on Thursday expressed the opinion that public schools were copying too much from colleges and universities. He disapproved of calling the sermon to the graduates of high schools baccalaureate sermons, as this term should be reserved for institutions granting degrees. He spoke against high school and grammar graduates wearing the cap and gown, as this, he said, was nothing more than copying or aping higher institutions.

He advocated a domestic science course, especially sewing high schools, and expressed the hope that he would see the day when girl graduates of Maryland high schools would make their own graduating gowns. Finery in graduating gowns, he said, was becoming more and more general and something should be done to discourage it. He approved of the plan to have girls design and sew all their own dresses and to make them plain. He urged the teachers to join him in the movement outlined in his remarks. Little could be accomplished in a year, but eventually the conditions desired would be brought about.

At the secondary session Dr. Edward H. Buckner, of Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, said high schools should solve their problems along lines best adapted to high schools and not aim at meeting requirements of colleges. The measure of efficiency of a high school was not so much what they were doing as how they were doing it. He pointed out inequalities in the high schools of the State and recommended a readjustment of the present course.

The election of officers resulted as follows: President, J. B. Noble, principal of the High School, Centerville; vice-president, Charles F. Raddatz, Baltimore City College; secretary, Hugh W. Caldwell, Chesapeake City; treasurer, Dr. R. Berryman, Baltimore; executive committee, J. B. Noble, Centerville; Earl B. Wood, Rockville; Miss Grace Hill, Hagerstown; Thomas C. Bruff, Towson; Charles H. Remsburg, Braddock Heights.

A LOVE TOXIN

By LULU EVERHART

"I wish that my daughter would marry," said Clark Dana to his family physician, Dr. Hunt. "I'm getting old, have no son, only the one child, and I would infinitely prefer to see her provided with a protector before I die."

"Have you any young man in view for her?" asked the doctor.

"I would like her to marry her cousin, Harry Dexter. He is an estimable young man, steady as an ox team and would make her a good husband."

Dr. Hunt was lost in thought a few moments, then said:

"I have often thought that, since science is doing so much in other respects, it should take advantage of the great work being done every day in the field of the imagination. I verily believe that if I could inspire your daughter with the idea that she is in love with her cousin she would be in love with him."

"But if you told her she was or that you wanted her to be it would produce the opposite effect."

"Very likely. However, I have long desired to try an experiment, and I would be glad to find a subject in your Susie. She is very young—barely eighteen, I believe—and impressionable. There she is now, sitting out in the yard with her embroidery. Suppose we go and sit under the same tree with her. I will do some discursing for her benefit."

The two men went to where the girl was, pretending that they had come outside to get cool. Seating themselves they continued the conversation.

"Recent discoveries," said the doctor, "have developed the relations between the brain—or the soul, as some persons will have it—and our physical nature. Many conditions which we have heretofore considered mental are symptoms of disease. Irritation or temper is a symptom of disordered nerves. Hatred may be produced by an affection of the kidneys. Now, there has recently been discovered a substance which used as a toxin will produce love."

"You don't mean it!" exclaimed Mr. Dana. Miss Susie looked up with an expression of awakened interest.

"Yes, sir, my friend Dr. Tobin has been experimenting on this line for ten years and has succeeded in producing a veritable love toxin."

"Are you joking, doctor?"

"If you think I am I will get you some of the serum, and you can try it on whomever you like."

"I should certainly be pleased to have a little of it!"

"Very well, I'll send you some this evening."

"How long a time is required for the serum to act?"

"Sometimes within a few days, other times a few weeks or months."

Now, it occurred to Miss Susie that she would lay in wait, as the doctor well knew she would, for the love serum, and very likely she would try it on herself. He was not disappointed. That night she stole into her father's room and carried off the bottle that had been sent him. Her father, having satisfied himself where it had gone, sent an invitation to his nephew, whom he knew was in love with Susie, to come and spend some time with the family at his country place. When Dexter arrived his uncle let him into the scheme that was being practiced on Susie. Harvey was delighted and ready to do his part in the matter.

A few days after the young lady had begun to take the love toxin she and Dexter were sitting together under the tree where the plot had been hatched.

"It seems to me," remarked her cousin, "that there is a singular look about you today."

"What kind of a look?"

"Oh, a dreamy, languid, half sad, half joyful look."

The girl remarked to herself, "I've got it."

"There's something the matter with me too. Ever since I came here I have felt very much as you look."

This time she said inwardly, "He's caught it from me."

"Somehow I feel drawn to you, Susie, as never before. What do you suppose it is?"

"I don't know, Harvey. What do you think it is?"

"I don't know either."

"How do you feel toward me?"

"Why, I feel like putting my arm around your waist, drawing you toward me—this way—and giving you a kiss. How do you feel?"

"Why, I feel as you feel."

Susie leaned back. Harvey put his fingers under her chin, raised her face and kissed her on the lips.

"I wonder," he said, "what made me do that?"

"I know."

"What?"

"I don't like to say; it isn't my part to say."

"It seems to me it's love."

"So it is." And she told him about the love toxin.

The next day Mr. Dana called up Dr. Hunt on the telephone.

"The serum has worked. The one inoculated gave the disease to the other."

"Good. Are they engaged?"

"She has sent Harvey to me to ask for her."

"Then they no longer need treatment from me?"

"No; send in your bill."

"My fee is a champagne supper."

"All right; I'll pay Saturday night."

Color Analysis.
It is rather interesting to know how a color can be broken up into its constituent parts. Take, for instance, mauve or lilac green. How can any one tell just what different colored lights compose such a color? It is all done with the prism, that wonderful little three sided piece of glass used in spectroscopes and other instruments. It is done on the same principle as the analysis of sunlight is accomplished by little particles of water in showing the rainbow. There are only seven primary lights. If sunlight containing all colors falls on a red object all the colors but red are absorbed, the red being reflected to our eyes, so we say the object is red. The prism will not split up red into any other colors, for it is a primary color. So is blue. But if purple be tried we get two colors apart, blue and red. We do not find purple in the spectrum, so any color not found in the spectrum of sunlight is known to be a compound one. It can always be analyzed by the prism.—St. Louis Republic.

Lincoln and Sumner.

Lincoln was modestly proud of his stature and of the effect of the physical man, especially when actuated by noble sentiments. He used to speak of his height to every tall man he met and to propose measuring, another guileless habit of self gratification. The only refusal he is known to have received was from Charles Sumner, who was also tall and proud of his height. Sumner was worrying the president, as he often did, about some perplexing matter when Lincoln abruptly challenged him to measure. "Sumner declined," said Lincoln, "making a fine speech about this being the time for uniting our fronts against the enemy and not our backs. But I guess he was afraid, though he is a good piece of a man. I have never had much to do with bishops where I live; but, do you know, Sumner is my idea of a bishop."—Harper's Weekly.

Didn't Know How Happy He Was.

George Arliss, himself a Britisher, delights in telling stories about his countrymen, especially of the 'Arrie and 'Arriet type.

"One day," says he, "I was on Hampstead Heath and heard the following conversation between these purely English types:

"Said the man: 'Blow me. 'Arriet, 'ow tired I feel! Miserable too! Wish I'd never been born! Now I've been born, wish I was dead again!'

"'What's the matter with yer?' asked 'Arriet. 'Wat yer grumblin' at? Why 'wat on earth would yer 'ave? Yer was drunk on Monday and again on Wednesday, and I'm blessed if yer 'aven't 'ad more than enough today! If that ain't enough pleasure for yer I don't know 'wat is. I suppose yer want to be a downright hanger 'ere on earth.'" —Chicago Record-Herald.

NO WONDER HE WOULDN'T SELL.

Captain Amundsen told an amusing story of one of his arctic expeditions. Several of his dogs having died, Captain Amundsen asked one of the natives in his best Eskimo if he would sell him a few dogs. To his surprise, the request was promptly refused. The explorer and the Eskimo had a long argument, the explorer pointing out that he must get dogs somehow and the Eskimo replying that they never sold them.

"Nonsense!" Captain Amundsen exclaimed. "I have often bought dogs."

The Eskimos seemed immensely astonished, and at the end of another argument Captain Amundsen discovered that instead of using the Eskimo word for "dogs" he had been asking the man to sell him some "children."

An Odd Record.

Miss Julia Moore, Sir John Moore's niece, like many very old people, was extremely proud of her age and lost no opportunity of showing it. When she was asked by a friend if she was going to see the coronation of King Edward VII. she answered: "No. I have been out of London for the last three coronations, and I don't care to alter my record." What an exaltation one must feel of being able to say a thing like that!—London Standard.

But He Told the Truth.

"Rumsy told me he was a lawyer, and I find he is nothing but a hanger-on of saloons."

"I heard him, and he told you the literal truth. He didn't say he was a lawyer. He said he had a steady practice at the bar."—Baltimore American.

Brain Trouble.

"Oh, yes; Dubley is a harmless sort of fellow! The only thing about him is that he has brain trouble."

"Nonsense! He hasn't any brain at all."

"I know; that's the trouble."—Catholic Standard and Times.

Got Them All.
The doctor told him he needed carbohydrates, proteins and, above all, something nitrogenous. The doctor mentioned a long list of foods for him to eat. He staggered out and wobbled to a restaurant.

"How about beefsteak?" he asked the waiter. "Is that nitrogenous?"

The waiter didn't know.

"Are fried potatoes rich in carbohydrates or not?"

The waiter couldn't say.

"Well, I'll fix it," declared the poor man in despair. "Bring me a large plate of hash."—Washington Herald.

She Paid on the Investment.

"Here," complained the aggrieved father, "I have spent nearly $15,000 on that girl's education, and now she goes and marries a $2,500 a year clerk."

"Well," said the friend of the family, "isn't that all of 15 per cent on your investment? What more do you want?"

Always on the Job.

"No, Mr. Rogerson, I cannot be your wife."

(Quickly recovering himself.) "Well, that ends it. May I ask you, Miss Lodemia, if you are carrying all the life insurance you want?"—Chicago Tribune.

Carrying Out Instructions.

"Now, Thomas," said the philosophic father, "you are going out into a new land, where brain and muscle alone count, where ability is the sole passport to success. Make one firm resolution. Come what may, be determined to hold your own."

Some years later the old gentleman paid a visit to his son, who had in the meantime taken unto himself a wife. On entering his son's domicile he found him nursing twins.

"I took your advice, you see, dad," said the younger man.

"What advice?" asked the old philosopher, who had forgotten his parting admonition.

Force of Habit.

An actor had the misfortune to fall off a ferryboat at night. Of course there was great confusion on board. The searchlight was turned round and round in an effort to find the man. He came up for the third time just as the light struck him, and from force of habit the actor raised himself and delivered a most ceremonious bow. Then the rescuers grabbed him.—Chicago Tribune.

After the Mother.

"Does your son take after you?"

"I used to think he was going to, but now that he's in college he shows every sign of taking after his mother."

"That so?"

"Yes; the only thing he's made since he's been there is the debating society."—Detroit Free Press.

If you are a housewife you cannot reasonably hope to be healthy or beautiful by washing dishes, sweeping and doing housework all day, and crawling in to bed dead tired at night. ## CHAPTER XXXIII.

The Flight in the Hall.

Scarcely comprehending that Claire had escaped from the room, I was swept forward by the crush of bodies. The preacher was knocked headlong beneath the table, but Fagin lay motionless underfoot. Jones and Grant turned to a door at the right, and I leaped after them. One of the two fired, and the ball struck my shoulder, the impact throwing me back against one of my men. An instant I felt sick and dizzy, yet realized I was not seriously hurt, and managed to stagger to my feet. The door was closed and locked, and, although my head reeled, I began to think clearly.

"The other way, lady!" I cried. "Quick into the hall!"

We tumbled out through the narrow entrance, and I found myself next to Eric. But we were too late to head off the fugitives, or prevent their achieving their purpose. In through the rear door, confused as to what had occurred, yet shouting fiercely, poured Fagin's wolves, seeking trouble. They were a wild, rough-looking lot, ill-dressed, and dirty even in that dim light. For an instant, congested within the limits of the hallway, both sides paused, staring at each other in mutual surprise and hesitation. Then I heard Jones' bellow of command, and Grant's nasal voice profanely ordering them to come on. With us there remained no choice; we must fight it out where we were, regardless of numbers.

"Fire! you damned fools—fire!" roared Jones, and there was a crashing of guns, the dense smoke swirling between us. A Dragoon at my right went sprawling; another behind gave vent to a yell as he plunged head first down the basement stairs. There was the sound of splintering wood, of breaking glass. I felt the blood in my veins leap to the fever of it.

We were upon the fellows with a crash, firing in their very faces, and leaping madly at them. There was little room between the walls, barely space for a half-dozen to fight in, shoulder to shoulder, but those behind, eager to strike also, pressed up so recklessly that we hurled them back. To me it was all confusion, uproar, deadly fighting. I could think of nothing to right or left, only of the struggling devils in my front. Faces, forms, came and vanished in the swirl of smoke, brown gun-barrels whirled before me, flashes of fire burned my eyes, strange features, bearded, malignant, glared at me. I leaped straight at them, striking fiercely. Once I saw Grant, and aimed a blow at him. Then he was gone, swallowed in the rack.

Our mad crush swept them back, helpless, demoralized. I stumbled over bodies, slipped in pools of blood, yet kept my feet. Every muscle ached; I was cut and pounded, yet drove into the mass, shouting to those behind:

"Come on, lady! Come on! We're driving them!"

A yard, two yards, three—beyond the door where the men had escaped we won our way. Then they could go no further. Blocked, unable to retreat, wedged helplessly against the far end of the hall they turned like cornered rats. I could see nothing of Jones, but I heard him, raging like a fiend.

"Now, you curs, now!" he stormed. "You cowardly scum—perhaps you'll fight when you can't run! What are you afraid of? There's only a handful, you can chew 'em up, if you will! Push 'em back, there! Push 'em back!"

With a yell of rage, those crushed against the wall hurried forward, driving the others; men were lifted and hurled at us; others gripped at our feet; by sheer force of numbers they swept us backward. It was hand to hand, neither side having time to reload their weapons. The smoke rose, permitting a view of the shambles.

There was a tangle of arms, a jumble of faces. They were maddened beasts, desperate, revengeful. Hands clutched at us, gun butts were thrust into our faces, the crush too dense to permit of their being swung overhead. Fifty Dragons had their sabres out, and stood to it like men, the steel blades dripping as they tasted blood. But killing one only brought a new man to the front. One does not see so much as feel in such a jumble. Yet I knew we were worsted, outnumbered. They came at us like a battering ram. I saw the sergeant shot through the forehead; I saw Eric go down beneath a crushing stroke, and roll under my feet. I stepped on bodies, fighting for my own life as I never fought before.

Somewhere I had gripped a gun out of dead fingers and swung it savagely, smashing the stock at the first blow, but retaining the twisted iron. The intensity of excitement seemed to clear my brain. I began to distinguish voices, to notice faces. I heard Grant yell safely in the rear; I heard Jones roar, "To hell with 'em! To hell with 'em!" Out of the murk of struggling figures I made out his black beard, the gleam of yellow fangs, and leaped toward him, striking men down until I was able to swing at his head. He went over like a stricken ox under a butcher's ax, knocking aside two men as he fell. It gave me chance to spring out of the melee.

"To the stairs, men! The stairs!" I cried. "We can hold them there!"

I cannot describe now how we made it, but we did. I only know Tom and I held the rear, sweeping circles of death with our whirling gun-barrels, falling back step by step as we fought. At last I felt the bottom stairs with my foot, and heard a voice shout:

"Come up, sir! We'll hold 'em now!"

Then I was above the heads of the mob, gripping the rail, and sobbing for breath. There followed a moment's wait, an instant of hesitancy. I began to see and feel once more. Below us the hall was jammed with men, so closely pressed together as to be almost helpless. Blood streamed from a cut in my forehead, nearly blinding me, but I wiped it away, and took one glance at their angry upturned faces, and gained a glimpse of my own men. There were but six of us, and one of these lay helpless propped against the wall. Tom and I stood alone, his face blackened by powder, his shirt ripped into rags; the other three were above, pistols in hand.

"Are they loaded?" I gasped.

"Yes, sir."

"Stand ready then, but look out for above; there was a guard up there—Tom."

He turned his face slightly. "Move back a step or two more; we've got to hold them."

"All right, sir."

I felt weak from loss of blood, my head reeling, and had to hold to the rail. Below us, growling like wild beasts, but seemingly leaderless, the mob crushed forward to the foot of the stairs. Suddenly I saw Grant, and the sight of him gave me new life.

"You black-faced hound," I called down angrily. "You've kept yourself safe so far. Now come on."

He snarled some answer, what I know not. There was an empty pistol in my belt, and I lunged it at him with all the force of my arm. He dodged, the weapon striking the man behind. With a howl of rage the fellows leaped toward us, bearing Grant on the crest of the wave. The pistols of the Dragons cracked; three fell, blocking the stairs with their bodies. We had room now in which to swing our iron bars.

Colonel Mortimer Was Propped Up on His Pillow, One Hand Grasping a Pistol.

and we battered them like demons. I lost sight of Grant, the red drip of blood over my eyes making all before me a mist. I only knew enough to strike. Yet fight as we would there was no holding them. We were forced to give way. Guns began to spit fire. I saw the wounded Dragoon dragged down under the feet of the mob; hands gripped my legs, and I kicked at the faces in my effort to tear loose. Tom reeled against the wall, his arm shattered by a blow, and one of the men above came tumbling over me, shot dead. The fall of him cleared the stairs an instant; then the rail broke, and several toppled over with it. I stumbled back almost to the top, sweeping the hair and blood out of my eyes. What—what was the matter? They were running, those fellows down there—struggling, fighting among themselves to get away. Oaths, yells, cries of sudden fear, made a perfect babel. I could not understand, could not grasp the meaning of the sudden panic. Who were those men surging in through the front door, pouring out through the lobby? Then a voice roared out:

"Bedad, they're Fagin's hell-hounds, hyes—ter hell wid 'em!"

Where had I heard the voice before? I sank down, too weak to stand, my head hanging over the edge of the stairs. Some hand drew me back, but I had no strength left. Only I could think—and the truth came to me. Camden militia! Camden militia! By all the gods, Farrell was there! It was the voice of the Irish militia man I hear the night we captured Delavan's raiders. Then I closed my eyes, and forgot.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

Searching for Claire.

I was unconscious, yet not for long. The first touch of water served to revive me, and I became aware that an arm supported my head, although everything was indistinct before my eyes.

"More water, Mike," said a voice close at hand. "Yes, that will do. Where is Farrell? Oh, Dan, this is Major Lawrence."

"One of the Dragons said he was in command. Hurt badly?"

"No, I think not; but utterly exhausted, and weak from loss of blood. They put up a game fight."

"Only three on their feet when we got in. Hullo, Lawrence, getting back to the world, lad?"

"Yes," I managed to answer, feeling strength enough to lift myself, and vaguely noticing his features. "Is that you, Farrell?"

"It certainly is," cheerfully. "Duval has his arm about you, and the Camden boys are herding those devils down below. You had some fracas from the way things look. How many men had you?"

I rubbed my head, endeavoring to recollect, staring down into the hall. It was filled with dead and wounded men, and at the foot of the stairs was a pile of bodies.

"Twelve, altogether," I replied finally. "They—they were too many for us."

"Three to one, or more, I should judge. We got here just in time."

I was up now, looking into their faces, slowly grasping the situation.

"Yes," I said, feeling the necessity of knowing. "How did it happen? What brought you? Washington?"

"All natural enough. Clinton got away night before last with what was left of his army. Left fires burning, and made a forced march to the ships at Sandy Hook. Left everything to save his troops. Washington, realizing the uselessness of holding them longer, sent most of his militia home. About six miles out there on the pike road a half-crazy preacher named Jenks came up with us. He was too badly frightened to tell a straight story, but we got out of him that there was a fight on here, and came over as fast as our horses would travel!" His eyes swept the hall. "Five minutes later would have been too late."

"But Farrell, the girl! Do you know anything about the girl?"

"What girl? Do you mean Claire Mortimer? Is she here?"

"Yes, her father is lying helplessly wounded up stairs, and she must be with him. Eric is somewhere in the hall, either dead or wounded. I saw him fall just as we retreated to the stairs."

Farrell leaned over and called to some one below.

"Not yet, sir," was the answer.

"Well, hunt for him. Now, we'll go up and find Claire. Major, can you climb the rest of the stairs? Help him, Duval."

I experienced no great difficulty, my strength coming back rapidly. There was a wounded Dragoon leaning against the wall, and half-way down the hall lay another body, face down. Without doubt this was the guard Fagin had stationed there. Duval paused to help the wounded man, but Farrell and I moved on across the dead guard to the open door beyond. Colonel Mortimer, unable to move, was propped up on his pillow, one hand grasping a pistol. With shaking arm he leveled it at us.

"Who are you? Quick, now!" he quavered. "I've shot one, and I'm good for more."

"You know me, Colonel," and Farrell stepped inside. "I am 'Bull' Farrell, this is Major Lawrence." He looked at us with dull eyes, his hand falling weakly.

"Farrell—Farrell—surely, the blacksmith. What Lawrence? The—the of floor Claire knows?"

"Yes; he's a rough-looking object I admit, but there has been a light down below, sir, in which he had a share. We've just cleaned out Red Fagin's gang. We came up here to tell the good news to you and your daughter."

The Colonel's head sank back upon the muffled pillow.

"My daughter—Claire—she is not here."

"Not here?" I cried, aroused by the admission. "Did she not return to you?"

"Not they came for her to go down stairs—a tall man with a black beard, and two others. They took her away an hour ago, and I have seen nothing of her since. I heard the shots, the sound of fierce fighting, but could not move from the bed. Tell me, Major, what has become of my little girl?"

"I do not know," I confessed, gazing about in bewilderment. "She came up the stairs, I am sure. It was just as the fight began, and I had scarcely a moment to observe anything before we were at it fiercely. She shot Fagin down, and then ran."

"Shot Fagin! Claire!"

"Yes; she was justified. Had she not acted so quickly I would have done so myself. He was forcing her into marriage."

"Into marriage! With whom?"

"Captain Grant," I answered passionately. "It was a deliberate plot, although he pretended to be innocent, and a helpless prisoner. Later the man fought with the outlaws against us; after Jones was killed he even assumed command."

"He has been hand and glove with those fellows from the first, Colonel," chimed in Farrell hoarsely. "I've known it, and told Lawrence so a month ago. I only hope he was killed down below. But what can have become of Claire?"

"She never passed along here," insisted Mortimer, "for I haven't taken my eyes from that door."

"Then she is hiding somewhere in those front rooms. Come on, Lawrence, and we'll search them."

We went out hurriedly, leaving the wounded man lying helplessly on the bed, and stepped carelessly across the dead sentinel lying in the hallway. The memory of Peter recurred to me. He was not the kind to desert his mistress at such a time. Stopping Farrell, I stepped back to inquire. The Colonel opened his eyes wearily at sound of my voice.

"He is not here," he explained slowly. "Both Peter and Tonopah were sent away to find a surgeon, and have not returned. We anticipated no danger here with Captain Grant present."

I ground my teeth savagely together, recalling the treachery of the latter, his insults to Claire, his deceiving of Eric, his stealing of papers, his alliance with Fagin, his selling of British secrets. Here was a villain through and through and I hoped he had already paid the penalty. If not, I vowed the man should never escape. But the thought of the missing girl came back, driving all else from my mind. She was in none of those rooms we searched, nor did we discover the slightest evidence of her having been there. As I stood in the door of the deserted studio-room staring helplessly about, a sudden possibility occurred to me. Ay! that must be the truth, the full explanation of her vanishing.

She had come flying up the stairs, frightened, desperate—so far as she knew, alone against Fagin's unscrupulous band. She had not returned to her father, or escaped by way of the hall. Where then could she have gone? The secret staircase, down which she had hurried me, and which was known only to herself, Eric and Peter. I gripped Farrell's arm eagerly.

"You know this house well—did you ever hear of secret passages in it?"

"I have heard it whispered in gossip," he answered, "that such were here in the old Indian days. Why?"

"Because it is true. The girl hid me here from Grant. And that is where we will find her. The opening is there by the false chimney, but I have no conception of how it works; she made me turn my back while she operated the mechanism."

He stooped down, and began search along the fireplace, and I joined him. Together our hands felt over every inch of surface. There was no response, not even a crack to guide us. At last he glanced aside, and our eyes met.

"Who knew of this beside Claire?" he asked.

"Eric and the servant Swanson. She told me she and her brother discovered it by accident through reading an old memorandum."

"And the Colonel is not aware of its existence?"

"I understand not. Do you know if the boy lives?"

He left the room, and I heard his voice calling down the stairs, but did not distinguish the words of reply. I was still on my knees when he returned.

"He is alive, but unconscious, Lawrence. Do you consider it impossible for her to escape from here alone, providing she took refuge in this place?"

"I could find no opening, except underground, and that is blocked now," I shuddered at the thought. "Besides, she must be in utter darkness, for I used all the candles."

"Then we must get axes, and cut our way in. Wait here, and I will bring up some of the men."

I straightened up as he left the room, and my eyes looked into a small mirror above the open grate. Good heavens! Could that be my reflection! Bareheaded, my face streaked with blood and dirt, my coat rags, my shirt ripped to the waist. I scarcely looked human. In sudden burst of anger I reached out and gripped the mirror, jerking it savagely. Then I sprang back. Slowly, with a faint click of the mechanism, the mantelpiece was swinging open.

CHAPTER XXXV.

A Confession of Love.

I could scarcely believe my eyes as the mantel swung slowly outward, revealing the black hole beyond.

I glanced about helplessly, and sprang to the door to call back Farrell. He was not in the upper hall, but as my eyes swept its length I remembered a half-burned candle in the chamber opposite. By the time I returned with it lighted, the mantel had turned on its pivot, leaving the way clear. The narrow stair was vacant, stretching down into the black depths. I listened, my heart throbbing, but no sound came from below. Could she be there? Was there any other secret passage by which she could have disappeared? I shuddered at memory of what it meant to be shut up in that dismal hole, without the companionship of light. Fearful of some accident I paused long enough to wedge a piece of furniture in the opening, and then, shading the bit of candle, began groping my way down. I had reached the lower floor before the flicker—yellow rays revealed any evidence of her presence. Then I saw a girl lying head down upon the table. My hand touched her arm before she moved, but then she faced me, wild-eyed, the pistol gleaming in the candle-light.

"Claire! Claire!" I exclaimed, started at her sudden movement.

"Slightly you know me."

For the instant she did not, her eyes full of terror.

"No! no!" she cried hysterically. "Oh, it cannot be! It is a dream! You—you—tell me who you are!"

I caught her hand, the pistol falling to the floor, and placed the candlestick upon the table.

"It is no dream, dear. I am Allen Lawrence, and I have come for you. I know I look disreputable enough, but there has been fighting—surely you know me now."

She caught her breath quickly, clinging to me with both hands—her eyes softening as she studied my face. "Allen—Allen Lawrence!" she repeated softly. "Oh, I can scarcely believe it true. Let me feel of you. I believe I was going insane—the dark, the awful dark, and no way out—no way out."

"Yes, yes, I understand," I whispered, drawing her to me. "I was hidden here once, remember. But it is over with now."

"But—how did you find a way to me? I—I never thought until it was all over that I had shut myself in here to die. I was so frightened. I just ran and hid. Oh, you cannot conceive what I had gone through."

She drew away from me, and again hid her face on the table.

"Oh, but I can, Claire," and I bent over her, my hand fondling her hair. "I was there in the hall below, ready even then to act in your defense. I heard all that was said, saw all that was done."

"You—you were there?" sobbing out the words. "You saw me kill him?"

"Yes, and had you delayed another instant I should have done it."

"Then—then," she glanced up, tears dimming her eyes, "you do not blame me? You do not think me a wicked wretch?"

"I think you a brave, noble woman," I burst forth. "How could I feel otherwise? Look up, little girl; I want to see your face. No, don't shrink back from me. There is no cause. I know the whole story without your speaking a word. You asked me to come back to help you, and I came."

"Yes," she whispered, "I know. You have been so good."

"Good! I loved you, dear. From the moment I lifted you out of the way of that mob in Philadelphia, I have loved you. I did not understand much that occurred, but I have never doubted you. Now I realize the cause of your masquerade and know you were justified. I can bring you good news—Eric is not a traitor, but was a prisoner, captured by Fagin, and held at Grant's request. We found him bound and under guard out yonder, as we approached the house."

"And he is here now?"

"Yes; he was hurt in the fight, and is still unconscious, but will live."

"His reputation—"

"Is safe. Washington believes he brought him the news of Clinton's route of march, and will never know otherwise."

She arose to her feet, standing straight and slender before me, the flickering light of the candle on her face.

"Major Lawrence," she began, "I wish to get out of here—it seems like a grave to me—but I must speak first. Oh, I am so glad I have accomplished what I endeavored to do for my brother. Captain Grant tried to make me believe him a deserter, but I would not. When he failed to come back to me as he had promised, I could hardly determine what my duty was. I knew his plans, his orders, and the thought came that I should carry these out myself. We looked sufficiently alike so that this could be done with little danger of discovery. He had uniforms concealed here, and I felt driven to impersonate him. I do not insist that I did right; I do not know—only it seemed right to me. Then—then" her voice faltered, "I met you, again and again, and I—I began to doubt myself. I had no one to confide in, no one to advise me. I was simply compelled to go ahead, and keep my own secret. The only ones I knew I could absolutely trust were our old house servants."

"You doubted me, even?"

"Yes, at first, but you must not blame me. We met strangely; you were a gentleman and an officer; I felt sure of this, and was tempted oftentimes to tell you my story. But before I dared do so, you—you spoke of other things and—then I was afraid."

"Afraid of what?" and I caught her hand in mine. "That a knowledge of what you were attempting to accomplish would turn me against you?"

Her eyes fell, shaded by the long lashes.

"Yes; once, do you remember I almost began a confession, when you spoke of your old-fashioned mother, and her conception of womanhood. How could I tell you then that I had dressed as a man, and played the part of a spy? I—I thought you might despise me, and—and I wished so to retain your respect. It was an accident we were with Delavan that night. We were endeavoring to waylay a courier, and rode suddenly into his party. I had to invent a tale on the spur of the moment. Major Lawrence, now that you know all, tell me the one thing I must know before we join the others—would you wish your own sister to do as I have done?"

"Not to pass through the dangers, surely," I returned eagerly, "but I should rejoice at her loyalty, and be proud of her. Claire, there has never been in my heart aught but love for you. As Lady of the Blended Rose, as daughter of a colonel of Queen's Rangers, even in the disguise of a Dragoon, I have never questioned the depth of your womanhood. Once I guessed you a British spy, yet ceased not to love you. Am I to have my reward? You know little of me, as you say, but as an officer and a gentleman, I ask you to repeat again what you whispered to me once yonder under the stars—do you remember, dear?"

"It was only to compel you to leave me."

"And now it is an invitation to remain."

Her eyes were uplifted to mine. Slowly I drew her toward me, her arms were upon my shoulders, and our lips met.

"I love you," she said slowly. "Yes, dear, I love you."

Above us, his head thrust through the opening, Farrell called:

"Have you found her, major? Shall I come down?"

"It's not necessary."

"The Colonel is half crazy, and the boy is getting back his senses."

We went up together, I hearing the candle in one hand, and helping her along the circular stairs with the other. In the upper hall I glanced below, but the bodies of the dead had been removed. Farrell stood bareheaded, a great figure on his short legs.

"This has been a fine night's work," he said steadily, "the last of Fagin's gang."

"Dead?"

"Ay, and Grant with him—begging your pardon, mistress."

Her eyes glanced from his face into mine, and my hand-clasp tightened. It was thus we went in together, and stood opposite the Colonel's bed.

[THE END.]

Danger in Foolish Primary Laws

There is trouble already in Pennsylvania, and it may spread to other States, where similar conditions prevail, as a result of a foolish and impractical Primary Election law, enacted in response to the so-called "progressive" sentiment.

Most of these Primary Election laws provide for all primary work, by both political parties, on the same day. Thus candidates for Presidential Electors are selected at the same time that delegates to the national convention are chosen.

At the Pennsylvania Republican primaries the Roosevelt Republicans secured control of the party, and nearly all the candidates for Presidential Electors are Roosevelt men. Now some of these candidates for Presidential Electors declare that in the event of their election they will vote for Roosevelt for President.

This situation, if not changed, will place the Republican party in Pennsylvania in grave danger of defeat, for it will make Republican voters who are favorable to Taft doubtful as to what course to pursue. No Taft Republican would care to vote for a candidate for Presidential Elector who would vote for Roosevelt, and not for Taft, yet many Taft Republicans of that State are in danger of being placed in this situation. No doubt they would prefer to vote for a Democratic Elector rather than for a Roosevelt elector.

Two Republican candidates for Presidential Electors in Pennsylvania openly declare that if elected they will vote for Roosevelt. Others say they have not made up their minds what to do. Some of them say they will vote for the regular nominee of the party.

Such a situation is extraordinary and unprecedented. Also, it is bound to prove demoralizing to the Republican party. Unless it can be corrected it will make Pennsylvania a doubtful, if not a Democratic State.—Wilmington Every Evening.

Earnings of College Graduates

The decennial record of the class of 1901 of Princeton University, just issued shows that the average income of members of the class 10 years after graduation is almost $4,000.

The average income for the first year is $706.44, and the average increase through the succeeding years is steady, with incomes from law, business and medicine increasing more rapidly than those from other pursuits.

The average income of teachers after 10 years was $1,779; of clergymen, $1,714; of physicians, $3,004; lawyers, $4,994; and business, $4,684.

The average in law and medicine is probably higher than the average incomes of lawyers and physicians in general. How much of this depends on the Princeton training, and how much on the original resources or social position of those from whom the class was recruited must be a matter of conjecture.

The frankness of those business men and lawyers who made reports on incomes the amount of which only themselves could know, is to be considered. Men of average income are not apt to under-estimate their earnings, especially when a comparison is to be made with those of their fellows.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Leaders Call on Taft

Many of the Taft leaders who helped secure the President's nomination at Chicago went to the White House last Tuesday to extended their congratulations.

Representative McKinley, director of the Taft Bureau until it went out of existence with the end of the balloting Saturday night, was one of the first callers. Senator Bradley, of Kentucky; Senator Smoot, of Utah; Senator Guggenheim, of Colorado, and Senator Jones, of Washington, came in later.

Mr. McKinley dictated a denial of the statement by Colonel Roosevelt that he could have won the nomination from President Taft on certain conditions which he refused.

"To any one knowing the situation the statement of Colonel Roosevelt that he could have had the nomination on Saturday certainly is very amusing," was Mr. McKinley's statement.

Negro Dead Across Tracks

Lodge Kelly, colored, 18 years old, was found lying dead across the tracks of the New York, Philadelphia and Norfolk Railroad at Nassawadox, Virginia, last Thursday. It is believed he was struck by a passing freight train while walking the track. His head was badly crushed and one hand cut off. He resided near Nassawadox.

Col. Carrington Resigns From Governor's Staff

Col. Edward C. Carrington, Jr., resigned last Wednesday as a member of Governor Goldsborough's personal staff, as a result of the friction between the two at the Chicago convention. The resignation was forwarded to Adj. Gen. Charles F. Macklin, who handed it to the Governor.

Colonel Carrington refused to discuss his action, saying the resignation spoke for itself. The Governor also refused to say anything about it on the ground that it was a personal matter.

Colonel Carrington was the leader of the Roosevelt forces in the Maryland delegation at Chicago, and became indignant at the action of eight of the delegates, under the leadership of Governor Goldsborough, voting for Chairman Root. As the people of Maryland had by an overwhelming majority shown their preference for Colonel Roosevelt, the action of the delegates from this State in going against him was regarded by Colonel Carrington as against the home people also.

It is expected that the breach will be felt by the Republicans in the State in future elections here. Colonel Carrington said he will follow Roosevelt in any step he might take, even to the formation of a third party.

In a telegram to Colonel Roosevelt Wednesday Colonel Carrington tendered his services at any time. He said those who supported Colonel Roosevelt in the Maryland Presidential primaries are unwavering in their loyalty and that tenders of support had been received from Republicans who opposed them in the primary and from Democrats who believe in clean politics.

Changes Made in National Forests

President Taft has just made considerable changes in National Forests in Montana, Arizona, Nevada, Utah, and California through Presidential proclamations modifying the boundary lines. By these changes nearly 275,000 acres of land are eliminated from the Forests, about 65,000 acres are added, and about 55,000 acres are transferred between two Forests, while a new Forest is created by the division of an old unit into two.

The net result is to bring down the total gross area of the National Forests to about 187,400,000 acres, of which nearly 27,000,000 acres are in Alaska. To a considerable extent, however, the reductions, so far as land actually owned by the Government is concerned, are apparent rather than real, owing to heavy alienations in the tracts eliminated. Some 22,000,000 acres of the National Forest gross area are not owned by the Government.

The high water mark of the National Forest gross area was reached in 1909, when the Forest boundaries included over 194,000,000 acres. It was then realized, however, that in making the examinations on which the Presidential proclamations creating the Forests were based the work had been too rapid to insure in all cases the best boundaries. Sometimes land which should have been included was left out, while at other times land was taken in which was not best suited to Forest purposes.

Consequently a complete overhauling and rectification of the Forest boundaries was planned, and has been going on ever since. By successive proclamations President Taft has eliminated nearly 11,000,000 acres, while he has added about 4,000,000 acres.

In Montana the new proclamations eliminate a total of 116,370 acres from six Forests—the Custer, Absaroka, Blackfoot, Kootenai, Lewis and Clark, and Flathead—while 14,640 acres are transferred from the Blackfoot to the Kootenai and 40,640 from the Kootenai to the Blackfoot, to facilitate administration. In Arizona 106,540 acres are eliminated from the Coronado National Forest. In Nevada 49,840 acres are eliminated from the Humboldt and 55,850 acres added, of which 12,800 acres are included in the new Ruby National Forest, composed principally of that part of the old Humboldt lying south of the Southern Pacific Railroad. In Utah 1,340 acres are eliminated from the Sevier, while in California 8,680 acres are added to the Shasta and 480 acres to the Clamath.

Killed Woman At Church

Emma Jews, wife of John Richard Jews and daughter of Pritchett Hollis, was murdered last Wednesday at the colored church, at Cambridge, Md., by James Carr in a drunken brawl. Carr shot the woman and she died before she could be gotten to the hospital.

According to the reports of those who were present at the shooting, Carr drove up to the church, where a festival was being held, at 10 o'clock and joined the murdered woman, walking the grounds with her a few moments. Words arose between the two which caused Carr suddenly to draw a revolver from his pocket and fire at the woman, the bullet striking her in the stomach, inflicting a wound which caused her death.

The alleged murderer was caught by Sheriff Bradshaw and Constable George James and lodged in jail to await the action of the grand jury.

SINGERS OPEN BIG FESTIVAL

National Saengerfest Being Held in Philadelphia.

6000 VOICES TO BE HEARD

Great Carnival is Being Held in a New Hall Seating 19,000 Persons. President Taft to Attend.

Philadelphia, July 1.—Upwards of 20,000 singers, who will take part in the twenty-third national saengerfest, and their friends are in this city. The great festival of song takes place in the new Convention hall, seating 19,000 persons, at Broad street and Allegheny avenue.

President Taft will be the guest of honor this evening. He is scheduled to make a short address and he will remain throughout the concert. He has expressed a desire to hear a chorus of 20 many male voices, 6000, and is really eager to visit Philadelphia for this great event.

The opening concert, given Saturday night as a greeting to the visitors, was highly praised. The vast auditorium, brilliantly illuminated and gorgeously decorated, was filled almost to its capacity of more than 13,000 persons. The stage was occupied by 1200 men singers, 800 women singers, the orchestra of 100 musicians and the soloists and director. The total capacity of the stage is 6000, making the seating capacity of the hall 19,000.

To Emil F. Ulrich was assigned the honor of conducting the opening concert, and long and patient training was evidenced by the precision of attack on the part of the big body of singers, the great volume of tone, the modulation, the ready and perfect response to the conductor's baton. With Ludwig Hess, tenor, as soloist, the male chorus sang Spiedel's "Viking Expedition," then the women's chorus was heard in Elgar's "The Show" and other numbers, the concert closing with the combined chorus in the final of the first act of Mendelssohn's unfinished opera, "Loreley."

Mrs. Marie Rappold was the other soloist. She sang Max Bruch's "Ave Maria," from "Das Feuerfest." Mr. Hess, virtually a stranger in Philadelphia, won an instant success. He possesses a rich, pure tone of good volume and range.

This afternoon there was competitive prize singing by societies of the second, third, and fourth classes and of the city federations of the third class, in the Metropolitan Opera house.

At the Convention hall this afternoon 6000 public school children will be heard in a great concert, under the direction of Enoch W. Pearson, with the entire festival orchestra and Mme. Rappold and Mr. Hess as soloists. Tonight the first festival concert will be given, under the baton of Mr. Klee, when the 6000 male voices will be heard, with orchestra, and Henri Scott, basso, and Mme. Louise Homen, contralto, as soloists.

Tomorrow afternoon at the hall there will be prize singing contests by the societies of the first class and city federations of the first and second class. In the evening the second and last festival concert will be given, under the direction of Mr. Kummie, and with Mr. Scott and Mme. Homer again the soloists.

On Wednesday at 10 a. m. there will be a business meeting of the delegates at Harmonie hall, 525 North Eleventh street, and at night will be held in the convention hall the great contests for the Kaiser prize.

And the Kaiser prize, that beautiful gold-and-silver statuette of the minstrel, donated by Emperor William II., of Germany, in 1900, is the trophy for which the greatest struggle will take place.

But four societies will be in this competition—the Junger Maennerchor, of Philadelphia, directed by Eugene Klee; the Williamsburg Saengerbund, of Brooklyn, Felix Jaeger, conductor; the Arion Society, of Brooklyn, Arthur Claessen, conductor, and the Kreutzer Quartet club, of New York, Frederick Albecke, conductor.

50 KILLED IN STORM

Canadian Town Swept by Tornado. Homes Destroyed.

Winnipeg, Man., July 1.—Fifty persons were killed and 1,000,000 damage was done by a tornado which struck Regina, Saskatchewan.

Several business blocks and apartment houses and several residences were wrecked. Wires are down and details slow in coming.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fail to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address, F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio. Sold by Druggists, 75 cents. Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

STRIKE ON P. R. R. IS AVERTED

ENDS A LONG STRUGGLE

Men Are Assured of Jobs When the Electrification of the Road Takes Place.

Philadelphia, July 1.—The controversy between the Pennsylvania railroad and 25,000 of its employees, working on lines east of Pittsburgh and Erie, has been amicably settled and a strike has been averted, according to an announcement made by the officials of the company and the representatives of the men, following a conference held in Broad street station.

The agreement reached is a victory for the trainmen, and immediately after the termination of the conference a meeting of the members of the general committee, who have in their hands the affairs of the trainmen, was held. At this meeting the answers of the company to the demands of the employees were accepted, with the proviso that confirmation shall be made by the company.

The sudden turn of the controversy came during a discussion of the "electrification" question. Previously the company had flatly refused the demands made by the men on this question and the representatives of the trainmen issued an ultimatum to the effect that unless the company receded from its former position on the electrification question and granted the demands made by the men, the 25,000 members of the three brotherhoods of railroad conductors, trainmen and firemen and engineers, would strike within twenty-four hours.

During the final conference General Manager Long announced that in the event of electrification or installation of other motive power on any of its lines the employees affected will be protected in accordance with the regulations existing when such electrification or installation takes place.

It had been the contention of the men that on lines where electrification had taken place the members of the train crew were given positions paying smaller wages than they formerly received.

Of the thirty-three demands made by the trainmen when the general committee came to Philadelphia two months ago all were satisfactorily disposed of with the exception of the electric question. The company previously took the stand that electrification is a long way off, and until it takes place the company would make no assurances to the men.

According to the agreement made by the company and the representatives of the trainmen on this phase of the controversy an arbitration board will be appointed, composed of a Pennsylvania railroad main line superintendent, two other railroad chiefs and the chairman of the four brotherhoods of railroad workers. In the event of a deadlock on the question, Charles P. Neill, commissioner of labor, will be asked to sit on the board.

If the decision of the board is favorable to the trainmen, the agreement provides; the men employed on the division shall be reimbursed the difference between the two rates from the time it went into effect, July 1, 1910, until the decision of the arbitration board. It is understood also that the arbitration board is to draw up regulations regarding future electrification of the Pennsylvania lines and place constructions on points now in dispute.

DROWNS WITH DAUGHTER

Prominent Man, Turning Rescuer, Loses His Own Life.

Williamsport, Pa., July 1.—William H. Gross, of Montoursville, was drowned while attempting to rescue his little daughter, Catharine, who was bathing.

The girl also drowned. Gross was thirty-eight years old and the daughter thirteen. Gross was a prominent citizen of Montoursville. He left a widow, a son and a daughter.

The Gross family occupied a cabin at a point where Little Bear creek enters Loyalsock creek. Gross and the girls were about to bathe in Bear creek, and Catharine, who had entered the water first, was attacked with cramps, when the fatal attempt at rescue was made. The bodies were recovered.

Morgan Declines

Dr. James H. Morgan, dean of Dickinson College, recently elected president of Dickinson Seminary at Williamsport, has declined the Williamsport position and will continue as dean of Dickinson College.

What Roosevelt May Do

Twenty-five States were represented in the Progressive gathering at Chicago which placed Mr. Roosevelt in nomination for President, Saturday night, as follows: Alabama, California, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, North Carolina, North Dakota, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Utah, West Virginia and Washington.

But how many of these States are likely to give their electoral votes to Mr. Roosevelt, with a regular Republican ticket in the field to divide the Republican vote and a Democratic ticket to hold the Democrats?

Judging by the primary results and the temper of the people, Mr. Roosevelt might carry California and possibly Kansas, but there the probabilities would end. Not another State in the entire list can be set down as affording the slightest probability of a Roosevelt victory.

About the only thing that Roosevelt's candidacy promises is the overwhelming defeat of the Republican party, assuming that the Democratic convention at Baltimore will do the right thing in the right manner.—Wilmington Every Evening.

A FAMILY MATTER

By EVAN B. MCKNIGHT

There's no use in a man's being annoyed with the feminine peculiarities of his wife. The best way for him to do is to get used to them. I suppose the reverse of this is true—that a woman may as well get used to the peculiarities of her husband; but, being a man, I don't know anything about that part of it.

The first thing I noticed about my wife after marriage that I didn't like was that she opened my letters and read them with as much complacency as if they were her own. There was nothing in them to injure me in her estimation, but that didn't make their opening by her any more agreeable to me. When a man has reached middle age without having any one dare to read what belongs to him alone, having from childhood considered such an act highly creditable, not to say dishonorable, to have his wife do such a thing grates on him terribly.

I hoped that when Lena noticed that I never opened any letter of hers she would refrain from opening mine. When she came down to breakfast later than I and the postman had delivered the morning mail I would hand her her letters intact. Sometimes she would say "This is from Aunt Clara" or Cousin Sarah or her sister or a brother. "Why didn't you open it?" whereupon I would say sentimentally, "I have never been accustomed to open another person's letters."

But Lena didn't take the hint or any other hint I gave her, just keeping on breaking the seals of my correspondents' epistles till at last I concluded to give her a more marked hint than any I had thus far devised. I wrote a note to myself from a mythical Horace Dunn, telling me in confidence of his engagement to Julia Halley, an intimate friend of my wife. As I expected, Lena opened the letter; but, finding in it a confidence—one which very much interested her—she sealed it up again, saying nothing to me about the matter.

Maybe there wasn't a hot time when Lena congratulated her friend on her engagement. Lena asked me who the girl was who had claimed to be engaged to her friend without admitting that she had opened the letter the man had written me and then deceived me by sealing it again. For some time I saw by her demeanor that her friend was not satisfied to have the matter hushed up and insisted on finding out who the man was who claimed to be engaged to her. Finally, when my wife could withstand the pressure no longer, she made a confession and demanded the required information.

My time had come. I told her that the lady to whom the writer claimed to be engaged was not her friend at all, but another person of the same name. Then I proceeded to give her a lecture on the practice of interfering with any one else's correspondence, even her husband's. "By doing so," I said, "you have caused a great deal of unnecessary trouble. Had you left the sole reader of my letter the error would not have been made."

This had only an irritating effect on my wife, who tried she would not again touch one of my letters even with a poker and for a time handed me my mail unopened in high indignation. But she soon fell into her old habit.

Instead of accepting the situation, as I should have done, I concluded to lay another trap. I wrote myself another letter which I asked a friend to post in a distant city from another mythical friend of mine, confessing that he had embezzled some money and asking me what under heaven he should do to escape state prison. He added that if any one except myself should see his confession the ruin he dreaded would be sure to come.

Lena opened this letter and, finding that she had stumbled upon another secret, made up her mind to reveal the letter and this time kept silent on a matter that was of no personal interest to her. But just as she was about to do so there was a smell of smoke from the laundry, and, leaving the note and its envelope side by side on her desk with letters of her own, she ran downstairs to learn if the house was on fire. She found an incipient blaze, which with some trouble was put out. Then she went back to her desk and did as she had intended with my letter.

When I came in and found the letter, apparently untouched, I tore it open and took out a letter to my wife from one of her friends containing a confidence I had no right to possess. I handed the note to Lena, demanding to know how a private letter to her had come in an envelope addressed to me.

I shall never forget the frightened look that came over her face. Intending to slip my letter back into its envelope, having been rattled on account of the blaze in the laundry, she had taken up the wrong letter.

I took her in my arms and said to her: "My dear, I find you have again deceived me. But so long as you don't deceive me in any more serious way than this I forgive you. Hereafter open my letters when you like. It is a womanly weakness and in a measure excusable."

From that time I have not cared whether Lena opens my letters or not. But she doesn't. Experience has taught her that it isn't best for her to do so.

TESTED AND PROVEN

There is a Heap of Solace in Being Able to Depend Upon a Well-Earned Reputation.

For months Princess Anne readers have seen the content expression of praise for Doan's Kidney Pills, and read about the good work they have done in this locality. What other remedy ever produced such convincing proof of merit?

John W. Heath, farmer, R. F. D., No. 2, Princess Anne, Md., says: "The cure Doan's Kidney Pills made for me nearly five years ago and my former public endorsement of this remedy still holds good. For more than a year I suffered from distressing attacks of backache and at times my back became so weak I could hardly attend to my work. The kidney secretions were also irregular in passage and there was sediment in them. Having heard so much about Doan's Kidney Pills, I obtained a box at Omar A. Jones' drug store and gave them a trial. They helped me at once and thus convinced me of their merits."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milbourn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States. Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

Discovery of Speed of Light.

One of the greatest discoveries of science is due to observation of the eclipses of Jupiter's moons. It was found that when the earth was in the part of its orbit nearest to Jupiter these eclipses occurred sixteen minutes earlier than when it was in the farthest part, whereas by all rules of astronomy they should have occurred at the same minute each time. It was deduced from this that the light was not instantaneous and consequently took sixteen minutes to traverse the diameter of the earth's orbit, a distance of about 200,000,000 miles, thus giving to light a velocity of 186,000 miles a second, which was accurately shown later by other experiments.—Chicago Tribune

What Makes a Woman?

One hundred and twenty pounds, more or less, of bone and muscle don't make a woman. It's a good foundation. Put into it health and strength and she may rule a kingdom. But that's just what Electric Bitters give her. Thousands bless them for overcoming fainting and dizzy spells and for dispelling weakness, nervousness, headache and tired, listless, worn-out feeling. "Electric Bitters have done me a world of good," writes Eliza Pool, Depew, Okla., "and I thank you with all my heart for making such a good medicine." Only 50c. Guaranteed by Omar A. ## Garriek's Wonderful Face.

Garriek had a poor opinion of the French actors of his day, and when in Paris for six months in 1783 to show what he could do without the aid of the usual accessories of the stage he gave private performances to audiences that quickly succumbed to the spell of his art. He told stories, gave scenes from Shakespeare and acted dramas in dumb show. There are familiar tales concerning his wonderful mobility of features and body, of his power to "create a new physiognomy which his friends did not recognize." There is the story, for instance, that Garriek posed to Hogarth for the portrait of Fielding after Fielding's death. And there is the other story that in sitting to Reynolds Garriek so completely changed his facial expression three times in succession that the artist flung down his brush and declared that he believed "he was painting from the devil." His French auditors were subjected to the same sensations.

His Hold on Fame.

Sir Henry Irving was playing his annual London engagement once when Nansen, then in the height of his fame as an arctic explorer, came back from an expedition in search of the north pole. The curtain was just about to rise one evening when Stoker came behind the scenes with news that Nansen was sitting in the royal box. Irving received the news in silence.

A few minutes later one of the members of the company bustled up to the star to tell him the same thing. Irving merely grunted. And right on the heels of this up came a fluttering woman super and said:

"Oh, Sir Henry, did you know the great Nansen was out front?"

"Nansen? Nansen?" said Irving as though he were trying to remember who this person Nansen might be. "Oh yes—the chap who stands the cold so well!"—Saturday Evening Post

A Cook's Accidental Discovery.

One of the best ways of cooking potatoes was accidentally discovered through the unpunctuality of a train. When the line from Paris to St. Germain was opened the first train carried an official party for whom lunch was ordered. The meal was fixed for noon, and shortly before that hour the potatoes were put on to fry. A few minutes afterward a message came that the train would probably be delayed for an hour, so the potatoes were taken off the fire, but left in the pan. Then came a second message, "Train just arriving," and the potatoes were hurriedly put back to fry again. When the party sat down to lunch the potatoes were brought on with the steak. Each chip was then found to be blown out like a small, crisp, golden balloon to the delight of the guests. The cook without knowing it had invented pommes de terre puffy.

A Parable.

Two men stood watching a steam shovel at work. With a clatter and a roar the shovel bit into a steep bank, closed on a carload of earth and dumped it onto a waiting freight train. "It drives me wild," said the first onlooker, "to see that monster taking the bread out of good men's mouths. Look at it! Why, it's filling up those fat cars faster than a hundred men with picks and shovels could do it." But the other onlooker shook his head and answered:

"See here, mister; if it would be better to employ a hundred men with picks and shovels on this job wouldn't it be better still, by your way of thinking, to employ a thousand men with forks and tablespoons?"—New York Tribune

Boat Racing in the Old Days.

Boat racing was a very different affair from what it is now, when the first boat race between Oxford and Cambridge came off at Henley in 1829. Oxford won, wearing "blue checks" and sporting black straw hats with a broad blue ribbon, while Cambridge was in white with pink waist bands and high hats. The weights of the racing boats used at this time may be judged from the fact that when they were converted from eights to six oars, with seats for passengers added, they could easily carry twenty persons.—London Chronicle

AN UNPUBLISHED NOVEL.

Burnaby's Handwriting Was So Good It Could Not Be Read.

It was stated at the time of Colonel Burnaby's death that he had left behind him the manuscript of a novel for which there was considerable competition among the publishers.

This is quite true. The manuscript, a bulky parcel, was handed to me with discretionary power either to publish it myself or to use it in connection with the proposed biography.

Here a singular and, as it finally proved, a fatal obstacle presented itself. Familiar for many years with Burnaby's handwriting, I could not after diligent endeavor make out more than a sentence here and there on the crowded page of manuscript.

Burnaby's writing was, possibly with the exception of Dean Stanley's, the worst I ever saw. It looked as if before sitting down to write a letter he had pulled a twig out of the hedge, mixed a little blacking and then gone ahead.

He wrote the whole of his "Ride to Khiva" and his "Ride on Horseback Through Asia Minor" with his own hand. But before they reached the printer they were fairly written out by a copyist.

The hapless man used to make out as much as he could, then leave blanks for filling up which he had to seek the assistance of the author. Sometimes there were more blanks in a page than words.

Despairing of making anything of the manuscript of the novel, it was submitted to a publisher, who turned upon it his most skillful decipherist. Neither head nor tail could be made of the manuscript, and the intention of publishing the novel was consequently abandoned.—Sir H. W. Lucy in Cornhill Magazine.

CEMETERY OF SUICIDES.

The Drearly Plot in Which Monte Carlo Buries Its Victims.

Matilda Betham-Edwards in her book "In the Heart of the Vosges" advises all visitors to Monte Carlo to go to the suicides' cemetery before those other places for which Monte Carlo is famous. She describes the small inclosure, walled in and having a gate of open ironwork, always locked.

"Here, in close proximity to garden rubbish," she says, "broken bottles and other refuse rest the suicides of Monte Carlo, buried by the parish gravedigger, without funeral and without any kind of religious ceremony. Each grave is marked by an upright bit of wood, somewhat larger than that by which gardeners mark their seeds, and on which is painted a number, nothing more. Apart from these stakes driven into the ground which mark as yet unappropriated spots, the indescribable dreariness of the scene is heightened by two monumental stones garlanded with wreaths and surrounded by flowers. The first records the memory of a young artisan and was raised by his fellow workmen; the second commemorates brotherly and sisterly affection. Both suicides were driven to self murder by play.

"The remainder are mere numbers. There are poor gamblers as well as rich, and it is only or chiefly the poor ones who are put into the ground here. The bodies of rich folks' relatives, if identified, are immediately removed. Many suicides are buried at Nice and Mentone, but the larger proportion for their own sakes."

AUTOMOBILES

Why the Buick is the Best!

The government invited all the leading manufacturers of cars priced from $800 to $2000 to submit a car in competition to a committee of mechanical experts. The cars were driven to the designated place and the drivers dismissed. The examination was then made with no representative of any of the cars present. Motor for motor, shaft for shaft, bolt for bolt, the cars were compared, tested and appraised by the government experts. One by one cars were eliminated until but one remained. It was THE BUICK. Of the seventeen or eighteen cars submitted THE BUICK alone stood the rigid tests of quality and construction upon which the examination was based.

This car was at once turned over to the government for immediate service.

A Compromise

By MRS. RACHEL L. OLMSTEAD

My husband is an excellent, good, pure, noble man. He has but one fault—he is very unreasonable. This defect in his character is especially noticeable in the choice of a place to spend our summer vacation.

Last year Frank and I discussed for two months this question as to where we should go for two weeks. Frank wished to go to some secluded spot in the mountains where he could take a rest. He works very hard, and fourteen days is all the recreation he gets during the whole year. That being the case, I couldn't see why he should want to go to a poky place where he wouldn't meet any one, with nothing to see and nothing to do all day long.

I am shut up at home all winter with no maid and a couple of little children, and I can't get out at all in the evening because they must not be left alone. The consequence is that all the nice dresses and things I buy are for summer. That's the only season I can wear them. Now, isn't it provoking that when the summer comes I must go to some out of the way place where a calico gown would do me as well as a silk one?

Last spring when it came time to engage board for our outing, after disputing for two months where we should go, Frank maintained that since he must have his rest in his own way we had better go to different places. He would get rid of the continued clatter the children make and the annoyance of having to correct them every time they misbehaved. I could go to a seashore resort, where, as he put it, I could show my fine clothes. That's all the sympathy a wife gets from her husband—just as if there was any use to buy nice things for no one to see.

Well, Frank went off to a horse town in the mountains, stopping at a hotel near by. I went to a large seaside city where there were thousands of people coming and going every day. It was very nice to be in the whirl, but unfortunately I struck a spell of bad weather. For three days there was nothing but rain and fog. Then a chill northeast wind sprang up, and I thought I should freeze. The children, who had anticipated so much pleasure playing in the sand and running in bare legs in the foam, couldn't go out at all, and I was obliged to devote myself to them all the while. I couldn't play nurse and wear good clothes; besides, the weather was too cold for my thin dresses.

So there I was. I had been on the coast for three days when I received a letter from Frank saying that he was doing splendidly in the mountains. The weather there was fine, the air was bracing, and it seemed as if he drew in strength with every breath. He supposed I and the children sat all day on the beach with the warm sun pouring down on us (when it wasn't too hot) watching the beautiful blue waves roll in. He could almost hear the children laughing and shouting as they ran about in the sunshine. And he could fancy me dressed in those clothes I had been all winter preparing for the occasion looking as pretty as a peach mingling with well dressed people.

Wasn't it aggravating? I just made up my mind that I'd wait till the first week was up and if the weather didn't mend I'd pack up and join Frank. There wasn't any use in my staying where I was on account of my clothes when I couldn't wear them, and if I were with Frank he could relieve me of the children. He would have had a week's absence from them and would now doubtless be glad to take them out walking and driving and boating.

Well, the weather didn't improve—that is, it cleared up for one day, then the clouds came again and it was worse than ever. Every day I studied the weather reports, and when on the sixth day there was a prediction that another storm was collecting in some out of the way place in northwestern Canada I telegraphed Frank that I was coming and took the next train.

We reached his place of rest in the evening and drove to his hotel in beautiful moonlight. But the next morning we awoke with the rain coming down worse than anything I had seen at the seashore. And what do you think Frank said? He accused me of bringing the bad weather with me.

Well, here I was with my costumes that I'd had so much trouble to procure still in my trunk. The only comfort in this was that even if the weather had been fine nobody wore finery, and it would have been out of place. Tom did help me with the children, playing games with them, and whenever there was a temporary let up between the showers he would take them out for walks. The boats were too wet for rowing and the roads too muddy for driving. What were my feelings when I read in the papers that at the seashore where I had been it had cleared up the day after I left and the gaiety was booming!

One day before we went home we had sunshine, and this was all the pleasure I got on my outing. We agreed that we would not try the separation plan again. So this year we decided we should go together. We disputed over it the same as last year. I wishing to try the seashore again. Frank wishing to get his rest in the mountains. Finally we concluded to compromise. We went to the seashore.

Ohio and the Buckeye.

The name Buckeye, though of earlier origin, became indelibly affixed to Ohio in the fire eating campaign of 1840, when General William Henry Harrison started out as the Whig candidate for the presidency and shortly became the "log cabin and hard cider" candidate. He was pictured sitting in a rough cabin, a barrel of cider handy to his elbow and strings of buckeyes upon the wall at his back. Cabins of buckeye poles were erected upon wagons and carried in Whig parades. One of the songs of the campaign ran:

We'll wheel it to the capital and place it there elate
For a token and a sign of the bonny Buckeye State.

The predecessors of the modern button men were a credit to the trade. In the Harrison campaign they sold Ohio buckeyes throughout the country, canes from the buckeye trees and woven emblems in the shape of the buckeye leaf. Thenceforth Ohio was the Buckeye State.

The unassertive tree, with its worthless nut and fecked bark, is not, it is true, anything to take a vast pride in. But there's no escaping the sobriquet. That is established—possibly for as long as Ohio is a state.—Toledo Blade.

Greenland's Glaciers.

The iceberg has its birth in the rocky folds of western Greenland. Under the ever present and irresistible pressure of "Greenland's icy mountains," the great ice cap, the remnant of that which once extended down over the northern part of the present United States, countless glaciers move toward the sea from an elevation of 9,000 feet. This sheet of ice covers an area estimated to be from 300,000 to 400,000 square miles or from six to eight times that of New York state. It is believed that its depth in some parts is more than 6,000 feet. The ice gradually moves down the flanks to the sea level, having a greater or less speed, according to the season of the year, some of the glaciers traveling in the summer time as much as fifty or sixty feet a day.—Exchange.

A Test in Courtesy.

"In banking, as in personal finance," remarked a suburban banker the other day, "the old adage, 'Take care of the pennies and the dollars will take care of themselves,' holds good. Just to illustrate, I've been a banker for thirty years. Courtesy made my success largely. A couple of years ago a woman whose brothers were depositors with us dropped in to see me and said she wanted to open an account. I arranged everything and then asked how much her initial deposit would be. When she said $5 I never quavered. I took it. Two days later she deposited $15,000. That account has never averaged less than $5,000 from that day. See what she was up to? She wanted to know how courteously small depositors were treated."—New York Tribune.

One on the Court.

When John Barton Payne was on the bench he was considered a purist and showed impatience if a lawyer slipped a cog and committed a grammatical error. On one occasion he "called" counsel for an assault upon the king's English with intent to maim and took up the examination of the witness himself. Later in the trial the attorney had considerable difficulty in bringing out the location of a certain ash box, and Judge Payne turned to the witness to say sharply:

"You knew this ash box, didn't you?"

"No, your honor," answered the witness, "but I knew of it."

"One on the court," observed Judge Payne. "Proceed with the case."—Chicago Post.

His Deathbed Jest.

When Charles Matthews the elder was lying upon his deathbed a friend, intending to give him a dose of medicine, handed him by accident some ink from a small vial. On discovering when too late the mischief he said, "Good heavens, Matthews, I have given you a dose of ink!"

"Never—never mind, my boy," was the faint reply. "I'll swallow a bit of blotting paper."

Crying Baby Always.

After we solve the nebular hypothesis and get a reasonably sure line on the fourth dimension we shall devote a few hundred years to determining why a woman with a baby comes to a lecture at all. Then we shall try to determine why she always sits in the front seat.—Buffalo News.

In An English Church.

When visiting Stockton church a short time ago I observed the following notice respecting dogs displayed in a conspicuous position: "It is not wrong to have man's best companion in a place of worship."—London Notes and Queries.

Ready Argument.

"Sir, I am soliciting advertisements."
"Young man, my time is valuable."
"Advertise with us and you will be so rushed with trade that your time will be twice as valuable."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A Candid Man.

"Are you looking for work?"
"No, sir; I'm looking for money, but I'm willing to work because that's the only way I can get it."—Boston Transcript.

Rich.

Funeral of Miss Louise Crisfield

The funeral of Miss Charlotte Louise Crisfield, whose death was announced in our last issue, took place last Tuesday evening at 5 o'clock, at Manokin Presbyterian Church, Rev. W. F. Friend, the pastor, conducting the service. The church was filled with friends and relatives of the deceased and two of her Sunday School classes, one of young ladies whom she had formerly taught, and the other of little children whom she had been teaching just prior to her illness, were present to pay their last tribute of respect. The pallbearers were two of Miss Crisfield's brothers, Messrs. Arthur and J. Woodland Crisfield, and two nephews, Dr. A. P. Dennis and Mr. Phillip Dennis. Interment was in the cemetery adjoining the church.

Among those present from a distance were Mrs. J. Russell Beckman, of Trenton, N. J.; Mrs. J. S. McMaster, of Jersey City, N. J.; Mr. Arthur Crisfield, of Washington, D. C.; Mr. J. W. Crisfield, of Pittsburgh, Pa., and Mrs. H. A. Royster, of Raleigh, N. C.

New Steamboat Line Starts

The Maryland Steamboat Company, a new competitor for freight and passenger business between Baltimore and places on both sides of the Chesapeake Bay, went into practical operation last Wednesday.

The steamer City of Milford (Captain Ward) left the foot of Pier 5 Baltimore, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon with freight and passengers for Solomons, Deals Island, Crisfield, Onancock and Tangier, a trunk route which it is proposed to maintain, sailing from Baltimore every Monday, Wednesday and Friday. The pioneer steamer will carry 250 tons of freight and a large number of passengers.

Mr. W. R. Lawsen, vice-president and general manager, went on the initial trip. He said the service will be duplicated within a short time by the addition of another steamer.

The City of Milford came to Baltimore from Washington. The steamer was built at Milford, Del., in 1906, registers 264 tons gross, is 127 feet 3 inches long, 26 feet beam and 7 feet molded depth. She has engines of 350 horsepower. The company is erecting on the west side of Pier 5, Baltimore, a shed 200 feet long by 80 feet wide, in which will be the offices and waiting room.

Dysentery is always serious and often a dangerous disease, but it can be cured. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy has cured it even when malignant and epidemic. For sale by all dealers.

Wicomico County Levy

The county Commissioners met Monday of last week and struck the levy for 1912. The rate was fixed as follows: For general county purposes, 7 1/2 cents this item providing for all county expenses, schools, etc. For roads, (under the new law) 20 cents; making a rate for general county expenses and roads of 9 1/2 cents. The State rate for this year is 2 1/2 cents, which will make a total County and State rate of $1.15.

Here are some of the large items of the levy: Public Schools, $30,000.00; Public Roads, $25,194.80; Pensions, $5,000.00; Attorneys, $2,000.00; Insane, $4,500.00; City Council—Salisbury, Delmar, Sharptown and Pittsville—$2,950.00; Ferries, $2,500.00; Health Officer and Vaccination, $1,050.00; Elections, $4,200.00; Court House and Jail, $3,000.00; Court Expenses, $5,500.00 Sheriff's Office, $3,000.00; Redemption Bonds and interest, $4,365.00; Printing and Advertising, $1,200.00; Orphan's Court, $600.00; Treasurer's Office, $3,000.00; County Commissioners, $2,000.00. The taxable basis is $12,597,404.43.

Black Murderess Lynched

Ann Boston, the negro woman who stabbed and killed Mrs. R. E. Jordan, wife of a prominent planter at Pinehurst, Ga., and who was later taken from officers at Cordele by a mob, was lynched early last Tuesday morning. After taking the woman from the officers, members of the mob put her in an automobile and set out for Pinehurst. Reaching there, the woman was hanged on a tree.

Details of the lynching are lacking. It is known, however, that the woman was hanged by a small crowd, which followed the Sheriff in automobiles after he had thwarted it at the scene of the murder.

Mrs. Jordan, the victim of the enraged negress, was attacked when she had complained of the woman's work around the house. The black woman attacked her with a knife, stabbed her several times in the back and cut her throat.

To Explain Whipping Post

To try to correct the wrong impression that prevails relative to the alleged cruel and barbarous punishment of the whipping post in Delaware, Chief of Police George Black, of Wilmington, Del., will deliver an address before the International Association of Chiefs of Police at their annual convention in Toronto in July. Chief Black stated that incorrect and exaggerated reports of whippings there as sent broadcast through the country have caused many to think criminals in Delaware are treated in a most inhuman manner when whipped at the post. He will demonstrate before the convention that the whipping post is not a cruel punishment and that it has a wholesome effect as a deterrent on the criminal class of his State.

Buy it now. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy is almost certain to be needed before the summer is over. Buy it now and be prepared for such an emergency. For sale by all dealers.

SMOKER BLOWS UP MINE

Lighting a Match For His Pipe, He Explodes Gas.

Pottsville, Pa., July 1.—Contrary to the rules in vogue in all mines, Joseph Fisher, employed at the Otto colliery at Branchdale, in a gaseous part of the colliery, unable to restrain his desire for a smoke, filled a pipe with tobacco and struck a match.

The flash of flame ignited a large quantity of sulphurous gas, and the man was instantly enveloped in fire from head to foot. Fisher was roasted in a terrible manner, and his life is despaired of.

Broke Ground for New Church

The congregation of St. Paul's Methodist Protestant Church, of Cambridge, Md., last Tuesday broke ground for their new church building. The pastor, Rev. J. L. Ware, was the first to break dirt. The new structure will be of Gothic design, and will be built of Port Deposit granite, with Indian limestone trimmings. The new building will accommodate a congregation of 600. The congregation has almost doubled during the six years of the pastorate of Rev. Dr. Ward. This will be the third new church to be built in Cambridge in the past two years.

Boat to Stop Piracy

A Lincoln Dryden, collector of the port of Crisfield, the largest hard and soft shell-crab market in the world, was over on Long Island last Tuesday getting ready to take back to his port the 60-foot boat Tarrago, which has been purchased by the federal government for the protection of oyster beds in the Chesapeake Bay from pirates. The government decided that a firm hand was necessary to stop the piracy, and the purchase of the Tarrago has caused much rejoicing in Crisfield, the town built on oyster shells, and in the adjacent villages.

Anthony Higgins Dead

Former United States Senator Anthony Higgins, of Delaware, died last Wednesday at the home of his brother, 27 Washington Square, New York. Mr. Higgins had been ill for some time. He was 71 years old and was the first Republican elected to the United States Senate from Delaware.

Big Fruit Crop in Delaware

In some respects this season resembles closely the last year, the early spring being cold and wet and backward, followed by unusually dry weather, but the dry weather did not come quite so early this year.

Last year the berry crop was about 11,000,000 quarts as compared with 22,000,000 quarts in 1910; while this year there had been shipped up to last Saturday night about 17,000,000 quarts, with about another million to come.

The apple crop which has become of importance in the last few years promises to be large, and considering the new trees that are coming into bearing for the first time this year there will be more apples grown in Delaware than ever before. Early apples are already going to market and are smooth and free from blemishes.

The center of the apple business is in Kent county, and the crop has attracted the attention of many people outside the State and they are asking why eastern men should send money west to buy land at from $300 to $1,000 per acre, while better apple land can be bought close to the markets at one fifth of the price.

Peaches are always uncertain until they are sold, but at this time many orchards have a fair crop and some have a full crop. It is estimated that there is now a possibility of at least a third of a full crop.

Other fruits are doing well. The hay crop is the largest ever harvested in this county and has been saved in almost perfect condition. Wheat is looking well. The straw is rather tall, it has headed out with long heads, full of good wheat. The harvest is now on, but no one has threshed yet. Corn is growing rapidly, and the stand is good.

Potatoes are better than ever before and with favorable weather from now on there will be a big shipment from this county.

Growers about Smyrna have just finished harvesting their cherry crop. The season was short, but the splendid grade of fruit commanded a good market price. Not in twenty years have prices been so good. They have been selling wholesale for 15 cents a quart. Last year 8 cents and 10 cents was considered high. The gooseberry crop has been prolific and prices good. The outlook for grapes is very encouraging at this writing.—Delaware State News.

"I Want Something that WON'T HURT MY FEET"

We hear that statement daily from women who "have such a time" getting a pair of shoes that needs no "breaking in" and we are glad to hear it, because this store sells the most ease-giving shoes in the world.

"Queen Quality" and "Boston Favorite" shoes are as pliant and as comfortable as your old shoes.

They are the only shoes using the Flexible "Wonder Worker Process" that slashes on the underside of the innersole a series of overlapping joints, not unlike the scales of a fish, both in appearance and flexibility.

This process makes the ordinary welted sole as pliable and elastic as that of a turn sole, yet more comfortable and more durable, in walking or standing, than the extreme thinness of the turn.

"Queen Quality" and "Boston Favorite" shoes come in all styles, in all leathers and in white canvas. Priced from $2 to $3.50.

HON. JOSHUA W. MILES GETS ROYAL WELCOME

When He Arrives in Princess Anne After the Adjournment of National Convention

Former Congressman Joshua W. Miles was the recipient of a rousing demonstration upon his arrival in Princess Anne last Wednesday evening, after the adjournment of the Democratic National Convention in Baltimore. The ovation was tendered in recognition of Mr. Miles' part in securing the nomination of Governor Woodrow Wilson for the Presidency. The reception party included not only the rank and file of the county Democrats but also Republicans and Independents as well as members of their families, many ladies being present to make the occasion a glad one.

The scene at the station was a brilliant one. More than a dozen automobiles, with flags flying and bright lamps burning, were lined up near the platform, upon which were congregated crowds of men, women and children. As the train drew near there was a brilliant display of fireworks. Mr. and Mrs. Miles were escorted to their automobile by Clerk of the Court S. Frank Dashiell and Judge H. L. D. Stanford. The procession then started through town and after several evolutions stopped in front of Mr. Miles' residence, where the lawn and sidewalks were lined with people. Mr. Miles was called on for an address, which he gave standing in his car, Mrs. Miles sitting beside him.

Mr. Miles stated that this was the proudest moment of his life. The occasion, however, was such a surprise that he felt unequal to it. After thanking his people for the greeting he gave quite an account of the convention proceedings and the part that he had taken in it. He stated that when the strategic moment came when he felt that he had fully carried out the State Primary Law requirements in voting for Champ Clark, it was no longer a matter of official duty but one of conscience and good judgment to exercise individual choice and vote for Woodrow Wilson. He was glad, he said, that this had been the precursor of the naming of a man whom Somerset absolutely favored. He believed that the nominee would sweep the country.

Mr. Miles in addition to other matters, spoke in the highest terms of William Jennings Bryan. Mr. Bryan, he said, was a man whose name would go into history, not perhaps as President of the United States, but as a statesman, orator and political strategist.

Mr. Miles also alluded to a conversation he had had with Mrs. J. F. C. Talbot, who for years past has attended every Democratic National Convention, in which she stated that this was the greatest she had ever attended. The way she expressed it was about as follows: "I have been in every session of every convention since Hancock was nominated, and this beats all of them. There was never anything like it for clean, open politics, and a fair square race for all. I shall never miss a convention after this glorious affair, and hope to see another like it."

Mr. Miles' address was vigorously applauded throughout. The reception was a great surprise to Mr. and Mrs. Miles, both of whom expressed themselves in terms of highest appreciation.

Launch Party on the Manokin

The young men of Princess Anne gave a launch party on Monday evening of last week to their lady friends. The evening was a delightful one for sailing and the party had a pleasant trip down the Manokin to Fishing Island where refreshments were served before they returned. Among those in the party were: Mrs. C. C. Waller, Misses Helen Brackett, Doris Maslin, (of South Carolina), Bessie Dashiell, Mildred Dashiell, (of Baltimore), Caryle Weaver, Marian Stanford, Mildred Beauchamp, Frances Wainwright, Olga Young, Emily Irving Dashiell, Mary Miles Dashiell and Messrs. Hayward Macaball, Merton Stevens, Herrman Cobb, Hugh Koehler, Gordon Tull, Richard Dale, Chas. W. Wainwright, Francis Brittingham, William Robinson, Walter Long, Oliver Beauchamp, Walter Young, Stewart Fitzgerald and Dr. Charles T. Fisher.

The new national flag, bearing 48 stars, emblematic of all the States, including Arizona and New Mexico, recently admitted, was flung from all Federal structures in the country and from the American navy throughout the world on July 4th. Thirteen stars only will be permitted in the blue square of the flag that are less than five feet wide, to avoid overcrowding.

WILSON IS NAMED TO LEAD THE FIGHT WITH THE AID OF MARSHALL

New Jersey Governor Wins a Big Victory After a Long Series of Ballots—Indiana Governor Placed Second on the Ticket—The Platform Progressive and Gives Satisfaction

FOR PRESIDENT, WOODROW WILSON.

Woodrow Wilson was born in Staunton, Va., in 1856; practiced law at Atlanta, professor in Bryn Mawr, Wesleyan and Princeton colleges; president Princeton, 1898-1903; governor of New Jersey since 1911.

Baltimore, July 8.—Politically speaking, Governor Woodrow Wilson of New Jersey put one over. And he carried Governor Marshall of Indiana with him.

This is how he did it: First it was getting too hot as president of Education in many ways. Every alumnus knows that. Politics opened her arms to him. Mr. Wilson was not a practical politician, but he plunged. New Jersey elected him governor by a big plurality. He was a winning campaigner. Those wise to "inside politics" said he was being trained for the Democratic presidential nomination. He was. But trouble arose with his backers. Governor Wilson went right ahead. He made his primary fight, and the most remarkable Democratic convention on record ratified him. He put one over on the conservatives, on the old guard.

Wilson raised the progressive standard and when he ran for governor in New Jersey, he won. He did the identical same thing for the higher nomination, and he won. He had Bryan's help. Tammany was against him.

But the defeat of Champ Clark, speaker of the house, was not attained without a deadlock struggle, which carried the sessions of the convention to the second week. It required forty-six ballots to nominate. This beat the record for a Democratic session. The nearest to it was the convention of 1896, which nominated Seymour on the twenty-second ballot. The convention of 1890 took fifty-seven ballots at Charleston without a choice, and the convention nominated Douglas later at Baltimore.

The present convention makes the fifth of five great Democratic conventions.

Perhaps no convention the party has ever held was more reviled and condemned or more ridiculed for the laxness of its conclusion than the first in the series of five which, apparently abandoning all the traditions of the party, put Horace Greeley at the head of the ticket in 1872. But the sequel showed that it was working for the party's revitalization.

In spite of its sensational sequel, the Tilden convention in 1876 was of less moment as a history maker for the party. His candidacy merely re-enforced the army which that of Greeley had called into the field. The independent element Greeley had started had grown large enough to assert itself. The famous editor's candidacy had made politics more than a war memory. It had buried the "bloody shirt." It had lifted the electorate out of the dead past into the living present. It had brought them again into something like touch with the newer issues of the hour, and Tilden came to show them what they were.

Just as the Tilden convention gave the lie to the tradition that failure of the support of his own state is fatal to the hopes of a candidate, so Cleveland gained the nomination in 1892, against the opposition of his home delegation. The ground swell for him over the rest of the country made the antagonism of the New York machine of little moment in the sequel. The independent element that Greeley's nomination had detached from the Republican party had grown into an overwhelming army.

In marked contrast with the convention which put Cleveland ahead for the first time was that which, in the same city—in the same building indeed—placed the party's standard in the hands of William J. Bryan in 1896.

This later gathering was a mad riot of noise and spectacle. The culmination came by what had the aspect of prearrangement, when, from all sides of the hall shouts of "Bryan, Bryan" began to fill the air. To the conservatives in the throng it was a note of alarm.

But the "cross of gold and the cross of thorns" won.

DEMOCRATIC RECORDS ON BALLOTING BROKER.

Never before were so many ballots required to nominate in a Democratic presidential convention. Seymour, nominated on the twenty-second ballot in 1890, had the record up to now. Here is the record, showing in each case the year and the winning ballot:

- 1844—Polk on fourth.
- 1848—Cass on fourth.
- 1852—Pierce on ninth.
- 1856—Buchanan on seventh.
- 1860—Douglas on second.
- 1864—McClellan on first.
- 1868—Seymour on twenty-second.
- 1872—Greeley on first.
- 1876—Tilden on second.
- 1880—Hancock by acclamation after second.
- 1884—Cleveland on second.
- 1888—Cleveland by acclamation.
- 1892—Cleveland on first.
- 1896—Bryan on fifth.
- 1900—Bryan by acclamation.
- 1904—Parker after first by changes.
- 1908—Bryan on first.

CONVENTION FACTS IN A NUTSHELL.

TUESDAY.
Former Judge Alton B. Parker of New York elected temporary chairman over William Jennings Bryan by vote of 578 to 508.
Mr. Bryan first named United States Senator John W. Kern of Indiana to oppose Judge Parker, but Senator Kern declined.

WEDNESDAY.
Convention marked time till evening, while credentials committee and resolutions committee struggled with the contests from eight states and with the platform respectively.
At night the convention decided to modify the unit rule by a vote of 855 to 411-3, being a Wilson victory. Credentials committee voted 41 to 11 to recommend that platform be adopted after the nominees were named.

THURSDAY.
Permanent organization effected, with Senator Elect Ollie James of Kentucky as chairman. Wilson won victory over seating South Dakota delegates by vote of 539 to 437.
Nominating speeches ran past midnight, and balloting began early Friday morning on Clark, Wilson, Harmon, Underwood, Baldwin and Marshall.

FRIDAY.
First ballot, 6:20 a. m.: Clark, 449; Wilson, 234; Harmon, 148; Underwood, 117; Marshall, 31; Baldwin, 22; Sulzer, 2; Bryan, 1. Necessary to choose, 728. Balloting resumed 4 p. m. and continued till early Saturday without result.

SATURDAY.
Most remarkable day of the convention. Bryan attacked Champ Clark and threw his strength to Woodrow Wilson. Continuous balloting until 11 o'clock at night, when the convention adjourned to meet at 11 o'clock Monday morning, July 1. On the twenty-sixth ballot, the one taken just before adjournment, the vote stood: Clark, 433; Wilson, 457; Underwood, 124; Pless, 40; Marshall, 20; Harmon, 18; and Bryan, 1.

MONDAY.
Twelve ballots taken between 10 and 11 p. m. without result, but Wilson gaining.

TUESDAY.
Wilson nominated on forty-sixth ballot by this vote: Wilson, 590; Clark, 34; Harmon, 14; absent, 39; total, 638, necessary to choose, 728. The nomination was made unanimous. Marshall named on this ballot.

It is difficult to believe that a butterfly could be worth five thousand dollars, yet such is the valuation of one brought from New Guinea to London by an explorer in the service of Hon. Walter Rothschild. This butterfly is jet black, nearly as large as a robin and measures 11½ inches from tip to tip of its wings. Another butterfly brought back by the explorer has a body covered with white hairs that they resemble fur. This butterfly was found on the Snow Mountains.

FOR VICE PRESIDENT, THOMAS R. MARSHALL.

Thomas R. Marshall of Indiana was born in Manchester, Ind., in 1854. He was a lawyer at Columbus City, trustee Wabash college and governor of Indiana since 1903.

PRINCIPAL PLATFORM POINTS.

- Tariff for revenue only is the chief plank of the Democratic platform. Real downward revision is demanded and Republicans asked for tariff tinkering.
- Republicans blamed for high cost of living.
- Rights of states reaffirmed.
- Presidential primaries favored.
- Party pledged to enactment of law prohibiting corporations from contributing to campaign funds.
- Single presidential term favored.
- Supervision and rate regulation of railroads, express companies, telephone and telegraph lines engaged in interstate commerce is advocated.
- Aldrich central bank bill opposed.
- Favors parcels post or postal express.

WILSON WELDS MARYLAND

Independents of Both Parties Unite for His Election

The independent Democratic voters of Maryland, who hold the balance of power in this State in national elections, and who carried the State for McKinley against Bryan, are solid for Wilson. Had the Democratic convention nominated Harmon or any other candidate but Wilson most of these independents would have voted for Roosevelt, but for the first time in many years the independent Democrats are lined up with the organization Democrats in support of the party ticket. Among the leaders of the independent Democrats are former Governor Edwin Warfield, William Marbury and W. Cabell Bruce. Governor Warfield, like Governor Wilson during his administration, fought the machine, but not with as great success as did the New Jersey Executive. Warfield was one of the first advocates for Wilson for President, he was jubilant over his nomination. He said:

"I think Woodrow Wilson an ideal candidate for President. He will be elected by an overwhelming majority. He is big enough, broad enough and brainy enough to make his administration one of the greatest in the history of the country. His great strength is in the enthusiasm of the young men. "At the Commercial Congress in Atlanta, two years ago, I heard Roosevelt, Taft and Wilson all speak from the same platform. Wilson made the most profound impression. He carried conviction. I am going down the line with him and will do everything in my power to aid in his election. I have already accepted two invitations to speak in New York in his behalf. I think he will carry the State of New York."

About the only time some fellows are ready is when it's time to quit.

Right-of-Way for the Proposed Railway

Mr. J. W. West, secretary, and Col. Knowles Croskey, consulting engineer and financial agent, began yesterday (Monday) procuring the right-of-way for the proposed Eastern Shore Power, Light and Railway Company, by meeting those interested at Deal's Island.

It is not only desirable, but will expedite business so that the project may not be delayed or endangered by such causes, if all the land owners and others interested, owning land or residing within three miles on either side of the proposed route will meet these representatives at the places on the dates and hours given in schedule that follows: Oriole, July 9th, at 11.30 a. m.; Habnab, July 9th, at 3 p. m.; Princess Anne, July 9th, at 7 p. m. and July 10th, at 7.30 a. m.; P. D. West & Son's store, July 10th, at 12.30 p. m.; Corbin, July 11th, at 10 a. m.; Snow Hill, July 11th, at 2 p. m. and 7 p. m. Those owning land or residing between the above named places for meetings may select the place nearest for meeting representatives.

That every citizen whose interest is likely to be affected and property enhanced in value by a railway, should consider this the most opportune time to be among those representing his community's interest.

In addition thereto, it is of vital interest that every proposed shipper state the number of acres of strawberries, potatoes, other truck and tomatoes and canning supplies he will probably put out when the line is in operation, bearing in mind that Princess Anne and Snow Hill are to be important purchase points with competition and a refrigerator car service at these points. Also the probable car loads of mine props, lumber, cord wood and other shipments. The above estimate is for the finishing touches of the final report of consulting engineer whose preliminary report has been approved by financial institutions.

The Right Of Proposal

By SARA L. WHITING

Charles and Edward Duffield were of opposite dispositions, Charles being one of those outspoken, generous fellows whom every one loves. He was older than his brother, who was selfish, polite and practical. When Charles had finished his education his father, who was a manufacturer on a large scale, offered his elder son an interest in his business. The offer was declined with the words: "Father, I would bring you to bankruptcy within two years. There is not a business heir in my head. I shall study art."

Mr. Duffield took his second son out of college, put him into his factory and advanced him rapidly. He wrote Charles, who was in Italy studying art, "Since you have decided to spend a dreamer's life perhaps you will be able to live on dreams." To this the son replied that he understood perfectly his father's life had been that of a business man and it was natural that he should look at things in a business light. He, Charles, was born with an artist's temperament and would be happy in his work.

Both Charles and Edward Duffield had been attentive to the same girl, Ethel Sanger, who was one to keep her own counsel. Up to a certain point neither brother had offered himself to her, though Edward had come very near it. But no one except the lady knew how the matter stood between the trio. Charles on going to Italy at the time he declined his father's proposition left Edward master of the field.

Edward made an excellent business man. He had a certain faculty that is valuable in business. He would as a buyer grind the seller and as a seller get the best price for his goods. Besides, he could figure expenses down to the lowest notch. He assumed first place under his father and worked so hard that he undermined his health. His doctor ordered him away, and he started on a trip around the world. He had been trying to induce Miss Sanger to engage herself to him for some time, but without success. Just before he started on his tour he made a last attempt and succeeded. Edward gave her to understand that if he could go abroad with the anticipation of claiming her as his bride he would have a better chance to regain his health. She considered it under the circumstances her duty to accept him.

While Edward was away his mother pined at the absence of both her sons at the same time and wrote Charles begging him to return to America. It was quite a setback to him in his profession to leave his studies at that time, but he listened to the call of duty and returned at once. He was received coldly by his father, who had not forgiven him for thwarting his wishes to take up a business career with a view to becoming his successor. Nevertheless, Charles was his favorite son, and no one doubted that he would inherit his share of his father's estate.

Charles had not been at home a month before Mr. Duffield, after an illness of a few days, died. When the will was opened it was discovered that all the property except the widow's share had been bequeathed to Edward.

The Duffield family seemed doomed to sudden and continued afflictions, for scarcely had the father died and the will read when a cablegram came from Japan announcing the death there of Edward. This put a different complexion on the inheritance. Charles would come in as his brother's heir and thus, after all, a doubly rich man.

Charles wrote Miss Sanger that since she would have inherited his brother's fortune instead of himself as Edward's heir had Edward lived to return he proposed to make over Edward's inheritance under the law to her, adding that he (Charles) and his mother would have left sufficient for both. After the elapse of some days he received a note from the lady declining the offer. Surprised, he asked if she would accept half of Edward's share. This she also declined.

Charles was puzzled. He had loved the girl and loved her still, but she had accepted his brother, and he presumed she loved or had loved her fiancé. The idea entered Charles' mind that possibly after a sufficient period had elapsed to enable her to recover from her grief she might accept an estate that she should have inherited from Edward by marrying Charles. So he determined to wait awhile.

But the poorest man in the world to wait is one in love. One evening Charles called upon Miss Sanger with the intention of proposing his plan by which she might after all accept the fortune she should have had. Miss Sanger came into the room wearing the serious demeanor of one who had recently been bereaved. Nevertheless there seemed to be an underlying cause for pleasure. Duffield noticed that she held in her hand a long, flat envelope.

He entered upon his proposition stumbingly. The lady heard him through; then, instead of replying, she handed him the envelope, saying she had received it by mail from Japan that morning. It was a will drawn by his brother leaving all he possessed to her. Since the father had died ten days before the son, the property involved belonged to Ethel Sanger instead of Charles Duffield.

Duffield rose and was about to depart when she called him back and threw her arms around him. It was she who had the right of proposal, so far as fortune was concerned.

Treasurer's Sale -FOR- 1910 TAXES

By virtue of the power and authority vested in me as County Treasurer for Somerset County by the provisions of Chapter 10 of the Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland of 1910, I hereby give notice that on

The Soft Answer.
There was an old darky who drove the solitary back in a small town on the Virginia shore where the late Senator Daniel had spent the season. In good weather the senator, who was lame, was its only patron, but in storm the old vehicle was so popular that he had narrowly missed several engagements owing to the old man's taking more orders than one antiquated chariot could possibly fill.

One stormy night the senator said: "Now, Jordan, be here tomorrow morning in time to take me to the 10 o'clock boat without fail. I have an important engagement in Washington."

Jordan drove away, promising to show up in good season. But next morning a quarter to 10 came and no Jordan. Finally, at five minutes to 10, he drove up, and the senator climbed in and started on a mad race to the wharf, arriving there just in time to see the boat pulling out.

"Now, Jordan," cried the exasperated Daniel. "I said we'd miss it!" "Yes, suh, dat's so, but," with sudden inspiration, "she ain't been long gone!"—Everybody's.

No Wonder the Cooking Was Bad.

We took up a scientific publication the other evening and discovered to our surprise that helium boils at minus 273 degrees C. This is something like 805 degrees below zero F. Here most of us have been going along trying to make helium stews or boil corned helium and cabbage, or cook helium fricassee with dumplings and have wondered what made the dish turn out wrong. We've all been trying to cook helium above zero, when it should have been quite the other way.

We also discovered that silver melts at 961 C., while gold melts at 1,062 C. While the article does not give any particulars as to greenbacks, our experience is that they will melt at almost any temperature between the first and the fifth of the month.

And iron will boil at a temperature of 2,450 C., so it is quite useless, not to say futile, to attempt to boil helium and iron together.—Chicago Post.

The Way You Do It.

One reads that Darwin never understood an equation, and the chances are that Isaac Newton could not have passed any examination in literary or aesthetic subjects with his idea that poetry was ingenious nonsense and statutory only stole dolls. Faraday had no gift for mathematics, and it is a mooted question if Napoleon Bonaparte could have passed a college entrance examination in French. But it was their ability to do some one thing well that has turned the world upside down at various times in its forward march, not their inability to do badly what all the world only does moderately well.

It makes little difference what you do. The difference lies in the way you do it. The business world is overstocked with poor people looking for good positions, while good positions are waiting for good people to fill them.

Having a Hobby in Middle Age.

Busy middle age needs a hobby as a recreation, a diversion, a getting away from the stress and strain of active mental or physical labor. A clerk in the municipal court in Chicago built himself a little observatory and purchased a telescope. The neighbors laughed and called it his cheese box. But the articles he wrote about his discoveries in the heavenly realms attracted the attention of learned astronomers, who began to ask, "Who is he?" And they were astonished at what he had accomplished with his meager equipment. But what of that? What if no one had known of his little hobby? It would still have served its purpose in the broadening of his life and the preserving of his mental and physical energy.—Farm and Fireside.

Time Wasted.

"I courted my wife three years before I got her," confided a friend, "and a lot of that was wasted time." "Why," we shuddered, "your wife is a most excellent woman." "Indeed she is. I can lick the man that says she isn't. But since then dear old days I have discovered that I could have got her in twelve weeks if I'd had the gall to ask her: Did I waste time or didn't I?"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

He Was Going Away.

It is related that when a group of visitors was going through the county jail recently a burly negro trusty was called to open doors and perform other similar duties for the visitors.

"How do you like it in here?" one of them asked.

"Like it? Lawd, if evah Ah gets out o' heah Ah'll go so far frum dis town it'll take $9 to sen' me a postal card."—Indianapolis News.

Made Her Sour.

Nell—Why are you so angry with Jack? Belle—He sent me a box of candy and wrote "Sweet's to the sweet" on it. Nell—Why, I think that was very nice. Belle—Yes, but they happened to be lemon drops.—Philadelphia Record.

After Midnight.

Wife—I'm sorry to see you come home in such a state as this, Charles. Husband—I knew you'd be sorry. Carrie, and that's why I told you not to sit up.—Exchange.

No Doubt.

Family Doctor to Young Lady Patient—You should take a tramp through the woods before breakfast. Patient—Oh, doctor, I can get better company than a tramp!

Life is a journey, and the fare is collected every mile of the trip.—New York Press.

Every Indian Had an Umbrella.

One of the incidents of the early days in Great Bend that caused a great deal of merriment among the white residents was the time the Indians bought all the parasols and umbrellas that were for sale in the town. This happened in the seventies and was on a rainy day. The Indians were on their way south and came through the town of Great Bend. They saw a number of men and women on the streets with umbrellas, and being plentifully supplied with money and a desire to own one of the handy contrivances, they got busy. The funny part of it was that they made no distinction between toy parasols, silk ones, and the serviceable linen ones. It was not long until the entire visible supply of all the stores had been purchased. Then the fun began. Some of the toy parasols were made of cloth that was highly colored, and as soon as the water hit them the coloring matter began to mix with the water and drip down upon the Indians' clothes. They minded this not in the least and were seen going southward whooping and seemingly in the very best of spirits.—Great Bend Tribune.

Rather Particular.

"Now, sir," asked the lawyer, "can you give me the true facts in this case?"

The witness hesitated.

"Well, sir, can't you answer?"

"I was just wondering," said the witness, "whether or not a true fact argues the existence of an untrue fact, and, to carry the idea a little further, what might be the precise shade of difference between a true fact and an untrue falsehood, or, on the other hand, if there is any real distinction between an untrue fact and a true falsehood. Sometimes, I apprehend, analogy is less convincing than dissimilitude. The introduction of a startling contrast may enable the mind to grasp the salient points of—"

"You can take the witness," gasped the lawyer, waving his hand feebly at the attorney for the other side.—Chicago Tribune.

A One Night Dress.

During the days of the second empire a leader of fashion in Paris, finding that she had overdrawn her husband's munificent allowance and that a great fancy ball was imminent, went to the great man milliner, Worth, and prayed him to hire her a costume. He was shocked. Such mean expedients had never come in his line. The lady prayed. The great man denied. Finally the prayers of beauty prevailed. But she was to wear a costume entirely of his devising. He dressed her as the flag of Paris. The tricolor soother in her skirts, on her shoes, in her enameled earrings. Her hair was dressed to represent a stormy sea in which rode the famous three masted galley bearing the arms of Paris. The lady was enraptured. The great man only charged her 1,500 francs. The dress was hers for one night only.

What's the Answer?

Old elephant hunters who have hunted their quarry in India, Siam and the wilds of the Malay peninsula are agreed upon the following fact: Bury the carcass of a full grown tusker in any spot in Asia—it matters not whether the location be high and dry or low and damp—one year from the date of burial not a shred of hide nor a sliver of bone can be found by digging. Neither disintegration nor ants can be an explanation, for the phenomenon has been noted in the highlands of Nepal, where buried carcasses of other animals than the elephant undergo little or no change within a year, and elephants' bones disappear in localities where ants are unknown. So far the scientists have failed to come forward with an answer.—Detroit Free Press.

Green.

Owing to its derivation the word "green" was originally applied to the color of vegetation, but not to the color of the sea. No application of "green" to the color of the sea is quoted before Chaucer, but as early as the year 700 it was used for vegetation. The word is akin to "grass" and "grow," which verb originally belonged to the vegetable world alone. Vegetables "grew," but animals "waxed." "Green" comes from an Aryan root, "ghrah," meaning to be green or yellow, and "yellow," "gold" and "yolk" come from the same root.

A Different Port.

Mrs. Neurith—"So you heard from your sister?" "How did she enjoy the trip across?" Miss Young—"Well," she wrote that she was very glad when she reached terra firma. Mrs. Neurith—"Terra firma? Why I thought she was to land at Liverpool?"—Boston Transcript.

An Evident Alternative.

"She married him in spite of great opposition, didn't she?" "Yes. If her marriage doesn't turn out well she'll only have herself to blame."

"Good gracious! Why? What's to prevent her blaming him?"

Troubles.

In life troubles will come which look as if they never would pass away. The night and the storm look as if they would last forever, but the calm and the morning cannot be stopped.

COLORS OF THE RAINBOW.

They Vary According to the Size of the Raindrops.

Violet, indigo blue, green, yellow, orange, red—the colors of the rainbow. Any child knows that, and the high school pupil can refer you to half a dozen textbooks to prove it. It is true, however, of only a very few rainbows, as C. Fitzhugh Talman demonstrates in the Scientific American.

The colors of rainbows vary with their width, and their width varies with the size of the raindrops, big drops producing narrow bows with bright, clearly defined colors, small drops producing wide bows with pale colors. Here are the colors as generally seen: (1) When the raindrops average one millimeter in diameter, violet, light blue, bluish green, green, yellow, orange, light red, dark red; (2) when the drops average three-tenths of a millimeter in diameter, violet, light blue, bluish green, green, yellow, orange; (3) when the drops average one-tenth of a millimeter, very pale violet, violet, whitish blue, whitish green, whitish yellow, pale yellow; (4) when the drops average one-twentieth of a millimeter (fog), white tinged with violet, bright white, white tinged with yellow, very pale yellow.

Patience: Who's Had?

The old "used in the bone" Cornishman of upper Michigan is a character that once met is not soon forgotten. While he has a distinct sense of humor, he is funniest when he least intends to be, and this is due in no small degree to his peculiar dialect, the latter being not only difficult to understand, but still more so to reproduce. The following is typical: The boss went up to a raise where two of his old reliable workmen were drilling, greeting them with "Ow she coming up, boys?" "Some slow, cap'n, some slow." "Well," said he, "eter mind, patience and perseverance will put us through." And the captain walked on. Said one of the men in the raise, "Etry, ow be this patience and this perseverance?" "Blowed if I da know, lest be they taw bluddy Finlanders in tuther stowp."

Half an hour later found Henry and his partner demanding their pay up to date just as the captain stepped into the office. "Well, me sons, what's matter?" "Wur leavin' cap'n. If yaw dna want they taw bluddy Finlawds to put us through you can 'ave 'em. Patience and Perseverance, ay? You can 'ave 'em, you can 'ave 'em."—Engineering and Mining Journal.

CHAPTER I.

A Chance Encounter.

"Don't you know, boy, you ought not to get in my way?"
The tide was at its ebb; the boats stranded afar, and the lad addressed had started, with a fish—his wage—in one hand, to walk to shore, when, passing into the shadow of the rampart of the Governor's Mount, from the opposite direction a white horse swung suddenly around a corner of the stone masonry and bore directly upon him. He had but time to step aside; as it was, the animal grazed his shoulder, and the boy, about to give utterance to a natural remonstrance, lifted his eyes to the offender. The words were not forthcoming; surprised, he gazed at a tiny girl, of about eleven, perched fairly like on the broad back of the heavy steed.

"Don't you know you ought not to get in my way?" she repeated imperiously.
The boy, tall, dark, unkempt as a young savage, shifted awkwardly; his black eyes, restless enough ordinarily, expressed a sudden shyness in the presence of this unexpected and dainty creature.

"I didn't see you," he half stammered.

"Well, you should have!" And again the little lady frowned, shook her disordered golden curls disapprovingly and gazed at him, a look of censure in her brown eyes. "But perhaps you don't know who I am," she went on with a lift of the patrician doll-like features. "I don't think you do, or you wouldn't stand there like a booby, without taking off your hat." More embarrassed, he removed a worn cap while she continued to regard him with the reverse of approval. "I am the Comtesse Elise," she observed; "the daughter of the Governor of the Mount."

"Oh!" said the boy, and his glance shifted to the most important and insistent feature of the landscape.

Carrying its clustered burden of houses and palaces, a great rock reared itself from the monotony of the bare and blinding sands. Now an oasis in the desert, ere night was over he knew the in-rushing waters would convert it into an island; claim it for the sea! A strange kingdom, yet a mighty one, it belonged alternately to the land and to the ocean. With the sky, however, it enjoyed perpetual affiliation, for the heavens were ever wooing it; now winding pretty ribbons of light about its air-drawn castles; then kissing it with the tender, soft red glow of celestial fervor.

"Yes; I live right on top among the clouds, in a castle, with dungeons underneath, where my father puts the bad people who don't like the nobles and King Louis XVI. But where," categorically, "do you live?"

His gaze turned from the points and turrets and the clouds she spoke of—that seemed to linger about the lofty summit—to the mainland, perhaps a mile distant.

"There!" he said, and specifically indicated a dark fringe, like a cloud on the lowlands.

"In the woods! How odd!" She looked at him with faint interest. "And don't the bears bother you? Once when I wanted to see what the woods were like, my nurse told me they were filled with terrible bears who would eat up little girls. I don't have a nurse any more," irrelevantly, "only a governess who came from the court of Versailles, and Beppo. Do you know Beppo?"

"No."
"I don't like him," she confessed. "He is always listening. But why do you live in the woods?"

"Because!" The reason failed him. "And didn't you ever live anywhere else?"

A shadow crossed the dark young face. "Once," he said.
"I suppose the bears know you," she speculated, "and that is the reason they let you alone. Or, perhaps, they are like the wolf in the fairy-tale. Did you ever hear of the kind-hearted wolf?"

He shook his head.

"My nurse used to tell it to me. Well, once there was a boy who was an orphan and everybody hated him. So he went to live in the forest and there he met a wolf. 'Where are you going, little boy?' said the wolf. 'Nowhere,' said the boy; 'I have no home.' 'No home!' said the kind-hearted wolf; 'then come with me, and you shall share my cave.' Isn't that a nice story?"

He looked at her in a puzzled manner. "I don't know," he began, when she tossed her head.

"What a stupid boy!" she exclaimed severely. A moment she studied him tentatively through her curls, from the vantage point of her elevated seat. "That's a big fish," she remarked, after a pause.

"Do you want it?" he asked quickly, his face brightening.

"You can give it to Beppo when he comes," she said, drawing herself up loftily. "He'll be here soon. I've run away from him!" A sudden smile replaced her brief assumption of dignity. "He'll be so angry! He's fat and ugly," more confidentially. "And how so amusing when he's vexed! But how much do you ask for the fish?"

"I didn't mean to sell it!"

"Why not?"

"I—don't sell fish."

"Don't sell fish!" She looked at the clothes, frayed and worn, the bare muscular throat, the sunburned legs.

"You meant to give it to me?"

"Yes."

The girl laughed. "What a funny boy!"

His cheek flushed; from beneath the matted hair, the disconcerted black eyes met the mocking brown ones.

"Of course I can't take it for nothing," she explained, "and it is very absurd of you to expect it."

"Then," with sudden stubbornness, "I will keep it!"

Her glance grew more severe. "Most people speak to me as my lady," she said. "You seem to have forgotten. Or perhaps you have been listening to some of those silly persons who talk about everybody being born equal. I've heard my father, the governor, speak of them and how he has put some of them in his dungeons. You'd better not talk that way, or he may shut you up in some terrible dark hole beneath the castle."

"I'm not afraid!" The black eyes shone.

"Then you must be a very wicked boy. It would serve you right if I was to tell."

"You can!"

"Then I won't! Besides, I'm not a tattletale!" She tossed her curls and went on. "I've heard my father say these people who want to be called 'gentilhomme' and 'monsieur' are low and ignorant; they can't even read and write."

Again the red hue mantled the boy's cheek. "I don't believe you can!" she exclaimed shrewdly and clapped her hands. "Can you now?" He did not answer. "Monsieur! 'Gentilhomme!'"

He stepped closer, his face dark; but whatever reply he might have made was interrupted by the sound of a horse's hoofs and the abrupt appearance, from the direction the child had come, of a fat, frascible-looking man of middle age, dressed in livery.

"Oh, here you are, my lady!" His tone was far from amiable; as he spoke he pulled up his horse with a vicious jerk. "A pretty chase you've had me!"

She regarded him indifferently. "If you will stop at the inn, Beppo."

The man's irate glance fell. "Who is this?"

"A boy who doesn't want to sell his fish," said the girl merrily.

"Oh!" The man's look expressed a quick recognition. "A fine day's work is this—to bandy words with—! Abruptly he raised his whip. "What do you mean, sirrah, by stopping my lady?"

A fierce gleam in the lad's eyes belied the smile on his lips. "Don't beat me, good Beppo!" he said in a mocking voice, and stood, alert, like a tiger ready to spring. The man hesitated; his arm dropped to his side.

"The very spot!" he said, looking around him.

A moment the boy waited, then turned on his heel and, without a word, walked away. Soon an angle in the sea-wall, girding the Mount, hid him from view.

"Why didn't you strike him?" Quietly the child regarded the man. "Were you afraid? Beppo's answering look was not one of affection for his charge. "Who is he?"

"An idle vagabond."

"What is his name?"

"I don't know."

"Don't you?"

A queer expression sprang into his eyes. "One can't remember every peasant brat," he returned evasively.

She considered him silently; then: "Why did you say, 'The very spot'?" she asked.

"Did I? I don't remember. But it's time we were getting back. Come, my lady!" And Beppo struck his horse smartly.

CHAPTER II.

An Echo of the Past.

Immovable on its granite base, the great rock, or "Mount," as it had been called for centuries, stood some distance from the shore in a vast bay on the northwestern coast of France. To the right, a sweep of sward and marsh stretched seaward, until lost in the distance; to the left, lay the dense Desaurac forest, from which an arm of land, thickly wooded, reached out in seeming endeavor to divide the large bay into two smaller basins. But the ocean, jealous of territory already conquered, twice in twenty-four hours rose to beat heavily on this dark promontory, and, in the angry hiss of the waters, was a reminder of a persistent purpose. Here and there, through the ages, had the shore-line of the bay, as well as the neighboring curvatures of the coast, yielded to the assaults of the sea; the Mount alone, solidly indifferent to blandishment or attack, maintained an unvarying aspect.

For centuries a monastery and fortress of the monks, at the time of Louis XVI. the Mount had become a stronghold of the government, strongly ruled by one of its most inexorable nobles. Since his appointment many years before to the post, my lord, the governor of the rock, had ever been regarded as a man who conceded nothing to the people and pursued only the set tenure of his way. During the long period of his reign he committed but one indiscretion; generally regarded as a man confirmed in apathy for the gentler sex, he suddenly, when already past middle age, wedded. Speculation concerning a step so unlooked for was naturally idle.

In hotel and hut was it whispered the bride Claire, only daughter of the Comtesse de la Mart, had wed at the altar, but that her mother had appeared complacent, as well she might; for the Governor of the Mount and the surrounding country was both rich and powerful; his ships swept far and wide, even to the Orient, while the number of metayers, or petty farmers that paid him tribute, constituted a large community. Other gossip, bending over past fires within mud walls, affirmed beneath their breath, lest the spies of the well-hated lord of the North might hear them—that the more popular, though impoverished Seigneur Desaurac had been the favored suitor with the young woman herself, but that the family of the bride had found him undesirable. The Desaurac fortune, once large, had so waned that little remained save the rich, though heavily encumbered lands and, in the heart of the forest, a time-worn, crumbling castle.

Thus it came to pass the marriage of the lady to the Governor was celebrated in the jeweled Gothic church crowning a medley of palaces, chapels and monastery on the Mount; that the rejected Seigneur Desaurac, gazing across the strip of water—for the tide was at its full—separating the rocky fortress from the land, shrugged his shoulders angrily and contemptuously, and that not many moons later, as if to show disdain of position and title, took to his home an orphaned peasant lass. That a simple church ceremony had preceded this step was both affirmed and denied; hearsay described a marriage at a neighboring village; more malicious gossip discredited it. A man of rank! A woman of the soil! Feudal custom forbade belief that the proper sort of nuptial knot had been tied.

Be this as it may, for a time the sturdy, dark brown young woman presided over the Seigneur's fortunes with exemplary care and patience. She found them in a chaotic condition; lands had either been allowed to run to waste, or were cultivated by peasants that so long had forgotten to pay the metayage, or owner's due, they had come to regard the acres as their own—a delusion this practical helpmate would speedily have dispelled, save that the Seigneur himself pleaded for them and would not permit of the "poor people" being disturbed. Whereupon she made the best of an anomalous situation, and all concerned might have continued to live satisfactorily enough unto themselves, when unfortunately an abrupt break occurred in the chain of circumstances. In presenting the Seigneur with a child, half-peasant, half-lord, the mother gave up her own life for his posterity.

At first, thereafter, the Seigneur remained a recluse; when, however, a year or two had gone by, the peasants—who had settled in greater numbers thereabouts, even to the verge of the forest—noticed that he gradually emerged from his solitude, ventured into the world at large, and occasionally was seen in the vicinity of the Mount. This predilection for lonely walks clearly led to his undoing; one morning he was found stabbed in the back, on the beach at the foot of the Mount.

Carried home, he related how he had been set upon by a band of miscreants, which later, coming to the governor's ears, led to an attempt to locate the assassins among the rocky isles to the northwest, haunts of privateersmen, rogues and those reformers who already were beginning to undermine the peace of Louis XVI's northern provinces. In the pursuit of these gentry, the governor showed himself in earnest. Perhaps his own sorrow at the rather sudden death of his lady, occurring about this time, and leaving him, a morose widower, with a child, a little girl, led him to more relentless activities; perhaps the character of the crime—a noble stabbed!—incensed him. Certainly he revenged himself to the full; not only raked the rocks for runagates, but dragged peasants, inclined to sullenness, from their huts; clapped some in dungeons and hanged the rest. In the popular mind his name became synonymous with cruelty, but, on his high throne, he continued to exercise his autocratic prerogative and cared not what the people thought.

"I Don't Remember."

Meanwhile, the Seigneur Desaurac, recovering, became a prey to greater restlessness; no sooner was he able to get about, than, accompanied by a faithful servant, Sanchez, he left the neighborhood, and, for a number of years, led a migratory existence in continental capitals. The revolt of the colonies in America and the news of the contemplated departure of the brave Lafayette for the seat of hostilities, offered, at least, a pretext to break the fetters of a purposeless life. At once he placed his sword at Lafayette's disposal, and packed him dog-like fidelity—across the ocean. There, at the seat of war's alarms, in the great conflict waged in the name of liberty, he met a soldier's end, far from the field of his ancestors. Sanchez, the man, buried him, and, having dutifully performed this last task, walked away from the grave and out of the army.

During this while the son by the peasant woman, intrusted to an old fishwife who had been allowed to usurp a patch of his father's lands, received scanty care and attention, even when the stipulated fees for his maintenance had continued to come; but when, at the Seigneur's death, they ceased, any slight solace to the caretaker's part soured to acrimony. An offspring of dubious parentage, she begrudged him his bread; kept him from her own precious brood, and taught them to address him as "brat," "pauper," or by terms even more forcible. Thus set upon, frequently he fought; but like young wolves, hunting in packs, they worried him to the earth, and, when he continued to struggle, beat him to unconsciousness, if not submission.

One day, after such an experience at the hands of those who had partaken of the Seigneur's liberality, the boy, all bruised and aching, fled to the woods, and, with the instinct of an animal to hide, buried himself in its deepest recesses. Night came; encompassed by strange sounds, unknown terrors, he crept to the verge of the forest, and lying there, looked out across the distance toward the scattered habitations, visible through the gloom. One tiny yellow dot of light which he located held his glance. Should he return? That small stone hut, squalid as it was, had been his only remembered home. But the thought of the reception that awaited him there made him hesitate; the stars coming out, seemed to lend courage to his resolution, and, with his face yet turned toward the low long strip of land, sprinkled with the faint, receding points of light, he fell asleep.

The earliest shafts of morn, however, awaking him, sent him quickly back into the dark forest, where all day he kept to the most shadowy screens and covers, fearing he should be followed, and, perhaps, captured. But the second night was like the first, the next like the second, and the days continued to pass with no signs of pursuit. Pinched by hunger, certain of the berries and roots he ate poisoned him, until in time he profited by his sufferings and learned to discriminate in his choice of the frugal fare about him. Not that his appetite was ever satisfied, even when he extended his explorations to the beach at night, digging in the sand with his fingers for cockles, or prowling about the rocks for mussels.

Yet, despite all, he hugged to his breast a compensating sense of liberty; the biting tooth of autumn was preferable to the stripes and tongue-lashings of the old life; and, if now frugal repasts were the rule, hunger had often been his lot in the past. So he assimilated with his surroundings; learned not to fear the animals, and they, to know him; indeed, they seemed to recognize him by that sharp unsated glint of the eye as one of their kind. When the days grew bleaker and the nights colder, he took refuge in a corner within the gray walls of the moss-grown castle of his ancestors, the old Seigneur's. No cheerful place, above all at night, when the spirits of the dead seem to walk abroad, and sobs, moans, and fierce voices fill the air! Then, creeping closer to the fire he had started in the giant hearth, wide-eyed he would listen, only at length through sheer weariness to fall asleep. Nevertheless, it was a shelter, and here, throughout the winter, the boy remained.

Here, too, Sanchez, the Seigneur's old servant, returning months later from long wanderings to the vicinity of the Mount—for no especial reason, save the desire once more to see the place—had found him. And at the sight the man frowned.

In the later days, the Seigneur Desaurac had become somewhat unkindly, if not forgetful, of his own flesh and blood. It may be that the absorbing character of the large and chivalrous motives that animated him left little disposition or leisure for private concerns; at any rate, he seemed seldom to have thought, much less spoken of, that "hostage of fortune" he had left behind; an absent-mindedness that in no wise surprised the servant—which, indeed, met the man's full, unspoken approval! The Seigneur, his master, was a nobleman of untarnished ancestry, to be followed and served; the son—Sanchez had never forgiven the mother her low-born extraction. He was, himself, a peasant!

SIGNAL MESSAGES.

Beacon Fires Were First Used, and Then Came Semaphores.

Signal fire telegraphing, with its very limited scope of information contained, seems to have been about the only means of communicating quickly across distances until relatively modern times.

It was not until the days of the French revolution that any material improvement over the beacon fire telegraph developed. Three brothers named Chappe devised the semaphore telegraph. This system got into active operation in 1794, and the first real message ever spelled out and telegraphed across country was in that year, and the text was as follows:

"Conde is taken from the Austrians."

The same day the national convention, sitting in Paris, sent back the following reply to the army:

"The army of the north deserves the gratitude of the country."

The semaphore operators attained a speed of three letters a minute in fine weather, with an average of one a minute over long distance. This made necessary the invention of condensed codes, which came into fashion.—New York Telephone Review.

Nerve Rewarded.

"Now, Billy," said the young man's father, "I've found a fine job for you—a job which will, if you attend strictly to business, give you a splendid chance to rise."

"What is the nature of the job?"

"You've seen some of the big buildings in course of construction, haven't you?"

"Yes."

"Have you ever noticed how the great iron beams are lifted in their places?"

"Sure."

"Well, a friend of mine, who is a contractor, has agreed to use you to stand on the beams and balance them as they are hoisted. I told him about the splendid nerve you had exhibited in sitting around and permitting me to support you, and he agreed that you would be just the man for the job."—Chicago Record-Herald.

His Profession.

Mr. Justice Lawrence was once passing sentence on a man, and in the course of his preliminary remarks he referred to him as "a professional burglar."

The prisoner raised loud protests from the dock.

"Here," he exclaimed, "I dunno wot you mean by callin' me a professional burglar. I've only done it once before, an' I've bin nabbed both times."

Mr. Justice Lawrence beamed upon him.

"Oh, I did not mean to say," he remarked in his most suave manner, "that you had been very successful in your profession."—London Answers.

A Practical Query.

My little boy stood, open mouthed, while a friend elaborated the details of a sudden death. The patient had not been considered very seriously ill, and his nurse entered, bringing a baked potato for which the sick man had expressed a wish. "But," said my friend, "before he had tasted it he died." I deprecated the sadness of such recital before the child, but I need not have feared. His baby voice piped out, "And what became of the potato?"—Harper's Magazine.

of New Jersey.
THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
of Indiana.
FOR CONGRESS:
J. HARRY COVINGTON,

The Democratic Nominations

The nominations made by the Democratic National Convention are the gratifying result of a session prolonged far beyond its usual length. The naming of Woodrow Wilson for President and Thomas R. Marshall for Vice-President is an accomplishment of which every Democrat may feel proud. It is the general belief that this ticket will sweep the country.

The difficulties that beset the Wilson supporters seemed for a long time almost insurmountable. Speaker Clark entered the convention ahead and remained ahead through a long series of ballots. Had the two-thirds rule not obtained, Clark could easily have won out. It was this that caused the long session and the difficulty of obtaining a change of base. Towards the Speaker, nothing but the kindest feeling existed and the Maryland representatives did their conscientious duty by him as long as it was possible. Many of these representatives were Wilson men at heart. When the crucial moment came Congressman Miles was the first to break the spell and come out boldly for Wilson. That he made no mistake, is borne out by the closing history of the convention.

The divided condition of the Republican party, the bolt of Roosevelt and the possibility of a third party in the field, are factors in the situation that greatly favor the Democratic nominees. It is of small consequence, however, whether that party is divided or not or whether Roosevelt runs on a third ticket or not; all this is more than offset by the strong Democratic nominations that are going to appeal not only to all factions of the Democracy but to independent and progressive thinkers of all parties.

Governor Wilson in the short period of his political career has proved himself as possessing qualifications that are not only theoretical but practical. In that brief space he has shown an executive and tactical skill far above that of the ordinary man. That he will make a good President none but dyed-in-the-wood Republicans will deny and even they base their doubts upon his brief career. Governor Marshall, of Indiana, who is to be his running mate is a man of modest temperament but of Presidential caliber. His presence on the ticket will serve in no small measure to help the Democrats to victory.

There can be no doubt that this is going to be a Democratic year. The Democratic candidates not only, but also the platform upon which they stand appeal to the people of this country. As the National Convention was a striking object lesson of the advancement of the people's wishes against political bossism, so the election will be a striking instance of the crushing of an administration that has favored the trusts, raised the cost of living and levied that cost through a high tariff from a most unwilling but now a most resisting people.

Third Party Unwound

Col. Edward C. Carrington, Jr., head of the Maryland Roosevelt League made it plain, in an interview Wednesday, that the selection of Governor Wilson as the Democratic candidate for the Presidency, would have no effect upon the plans of Colonel Roosevelt in placing himself before the people of the country as a candidate.

"I think," he said, "that the selection of Governor Wilson showed good reasoning power on the part of the delegates. It was a strong nomination and the nominee will prove himself to be a worthy candidate. It will have no effect, however, on the plans of Colonel Roosevelt. He also will be in the field."

Other Hot Political Time

The youngsters think there never was such an exciting year as this and that party lines were never in such a state of disrepair. But men with long memories recall things that happened when they were youngsters and wonder if this is really the most exciting year ever.

We do not need to go back "before the war" to the break-up of the Whig party, the formation of the Republican party and the Charleston and Baltimore conventions of the Democratic party in 1860. There have been red-hot times and party splits since then. Forty years ago there was a tremendous ruction in the Republican party over the political management and policies comprehensively known as Grantism. Such "highbrows" as Charles Sumner and Samuel Bowles, of Massachusetts; Lyman Trumbull, of Illinois, friend of Lincoln, and Carl Schurz and Gratz Brown, of Missouri, with a good many other "men of light and leading," formed the Liberal Republican party. Hoping to profit by this diversion, the Democrats joined the Liberals and nominated Horace Greeley, and in due time Grant was re-elected.

The Populist movement of 1892 was heralded with as much trumpeting about the rights of a man before the rights of property as the Roosevelt movement is now. The main purpose of the movement which nominated Weaver was to defeat Grover Cleveland. The effort to engraft Populism upon the Democratic party had not succeeded, and Democrats with strong Populist leanings were determined to wreck the party they could not control. Weaver carried six States, but he cut into the Republican rather than the Democratic strength. Populism was for the most part an outgrowth of Western Republicanism, and Weaver's Republicanism, and Weaver's candidacy only made the defeat of President Harris more overwhelming, for Cleveland carried California, except one electoral vote; Connecticut, Indiana, Illinois, Maryland, got five electoral votes in Michigan and one in Ohio, New Jersey and New York, and got one electoral vote in North Dakota. The Weaver candidacy was a total failure for the purpose for which it was instituted.

The Palmer and Buckner ticket of 1896 had substantial reasons for its existence. It was led by as good Democrats as there are in the country. But it made no impression whatever upon the voting strength of the Democratic party. It contributed in no appreciable degree to the defeat of Bryan.

But in the way of political excitement, denunciation and recrimination, predictions that the old parties had outlived their usefulness and that a new generation was on deck with new issues and new men, these contests of earlier years were about as impressive as the year 1912.—Philadelphia Record.

Death of Gen. John Gill

Following a lingering illness, Gen. John Gill of R., retired president of the Mercantile Trust and Deposit Company, of Baltimore, a financier of repute, intimate friend of J. Pierpont Morgan and a veteran of the Civil War, died at 5.15 o'clock Tuesday afternoon at his cottage in Ventnor, N. J., where he had gone to spend the summer with his family. He had been an invalid for a long time and his death, though sudden, was not unexpected. His remains were taken to Baltimore Wednesday morning and thence to his home 929 North Charles street.

He was 70 years old and one of the most prominent residents of Baltimore. At his bedside when death came were the immediate members of his family. The deceased belonged to the old school of Southern gentlemen.

A tall, soldierly looking man with snow white hair and mustache, Gen. Gill was one of the most noticeable and best-liked men in the financial district. His soldierly bearing was not acquired, but was hereditary. His mother was descended from Capt. John Deale, of Maryland, who gave valiant and distinguished service in the Revolutionary War. Other ancestors, both on the paternal and maternal side, fought in the War of 1812, while General Gill himself served with the Confederate Army throughout the Civil War.

Maryland Bar Association

The Maryland Bar Association which assembled at Cape May, N. J., for its seventeenth annual session on July 3, concluded its meeting on July 3d. There were a number of notable addresses one of which was by Judge James A. Pearce, of the Court of Appeals. The meeting closed with a banquet on Wednesday night. The toast "Our Ladies" was responded to by Eugene O'Dunne, and everybody expected that his remarks would be in customary lively and witty vein. Instead he treated the subject very solemnly, philosophizing upon the duties the more favored of the female sex owe to their less fortunate sisters and giving much good advice. Such a grave look was on Mr. O'Dunne's countenance and so mournful his tone that many thought his speech would prove to be a joke, but he kept moralizing to the end and finished as he began.

In sharp contrast were the witty introductions of the speakers by former Judge Ferdinand Williams, of Cumberland, who acted as toastmaster, and who kept everything laughing by his impromptu sallies and good-humored hints.

Chief Judge A. Hunter Boyd, of the Court of Appeals and the new president of the association, was the first speaker and responded to the toast "Our New President." He thanked the association for the honor conferred upon him and promised to do all that he could to further its interests.

Judge Robert T. Daniel, of Georgia, spoke to the toast "The Lawyer of the South" in a witty manner.

The response of Levin Irving Handy, of Delaware, to the toast "Lawyers from Different Points of View" was an eloquent and vigorous defense of lawyers generally and contained some slaps at the bench.

Osborne I. Yellott, of Towson, was down to respond to "The Bar," but he said Judge N. Charles Burke, of Towson, had consented to take his place on the program. Judge Burke, replied to some of Mr. Handy's remarks and defended the bench.

THE PLATFORM.

Principal Democratic Plank is the Tariff—Generally Progressive.

Baltimore, July 8.—The platform adopted by the Democratic national convention was as follows:

We declare it to be a fundamental principle of the Democratic party that the federal government under the constitution has no right or power to impose or collect tariff duties except for the purpose of revenue, and we demand that the collection of such taxes shall be limited to the necessities of government honestly and economically administered.

The high Republican tariff is the principal cause of the unequal distribution of wealth; it is a system of taxation which makes the rich richer and the poor poorer; under its operations the American farmer and laboring men are the chief sufferers; it raises the cost of the necessities of life to them, but does not protect their product or wages.

The farmer sells largely in free markets and buys entirely in the protected markets. In the most highly protected industries, such as cotton and wool, steel and iron, the wages of the laborers are the lowest paid in any of our industries. We denounce the Republican pretense on that subject and assert that American wages are established by competitive conditions and not by the tariff.

Demand Revision of Tariff.

We favor the immediate downward revision of the existing high and in many cases prohibitive tariff duties, insisting that material reductions be speedily made upon the necessities of life. Articles entering into competition with trust controlled products and articles of American manufacture which are sold abroad more cheaply than at home should be put upon the free list.

We recognize that our system of tariff taxation is intimately connected with the business of the country, and we favor the ultimate attainment of the principles we advocate by legislation that will not injure or destroy legitimate industry.

We denounce the action of President Taft in vetoing the bills to reduce the tariff in the cotton, woolen, metals and cheese and the high tariff laws enacted and maintained by the Republican party and from trusts and commercial conspiracies fostered and encouraged by such laws, and we assert that no substantial relief can be secured for the people until import duties on the necessities of life are materially reduced and these criminal conspiracies broken up.

Anti-trust Law.

We favor the declaration by law of the conditions upon which corporations shall be permitted to engage in interstate trade, including, among others, the prevention of holding companies, of interlocking directors of stock watering, of discrimination in price and the control of any industry as to make it a menace to competitive conditions.

We regret that the Sherman anti-trust law has received a judicial construction depriving it of much of its efficacy, and we favor the enactment of legislation which will restore to the statute the strength of which it has been deprived by such interpretation.

Rights of the States.

We believe in the preservation and maintenance in their full strength and integrity of the three co-ordinate branches of the federal government—the executive, the legislative and the judicial—each keeping within its own bounds and not encroaching upon the just powers of either of the others.

Believing that the most efficient results under our system of government are to be attained by the full exercise by the states of their reserved sovereign powers, we denounce as usurpation the efforts to deprive the states of the rights reserved to them and to enlarge and magnify by indirect means the powers of the federal government.

Presidential Primaries.

The movement toward more popular government should be promoted through legislation in each state which will permit the expression of the preference of the electors for national candidates at presidential primaries.

We direct that the national committee incorporate in the call for the next nominating convention a requirement that all expressions of preference for presidential candidates shall be given, and the selection of delegates thereafter made through a primary election conducted by the party organization in each state where such expression and election are not provided for by state law. Committees who are hater to constitute the meeting of the Democratic national committee and whose election is not provided for by law shall be chosen in each state at such primary elections, and the service and authority of committees, however chosen, shall begin immediately after the receipt of the credentials respectively.

We pledge the Democratic party to the enactment of a law prohibiting any corporation from contributing to a campaign fund and any individual from contributing any amount above a reasonable maximum.

Term of President.

We favor a single presidential term and to that end urge the adoption of an amendment to the constitution making the president of the United States ineligible to re-election, and we pledge the candidate of this convention to this principle.

We favor the efficient supervision and rate regulation of railroads, express companies, telegraph and telephone lines engaged in interstate commerce.

We favor such legislation as will effectively prohibit the railroads, express, telegraph and telephone companies from engaging in business which brings them into competition with their shippers; also legislation preventing the overissue of stocks and bonds by interstate railroads, express companies, telegraph and telephone lines.

We oppose the so called Aldrich bill of the establishment of a central bank, and we believe our country will be largely freed from panics and consequent unemployment and business depression by such a systematic revision of our banking laws as will render temporary relief in localities in which such relief is needed, with protection from control or domination by what is known as the money trust.

We condemn the present methods of depositing government funds in a few favored banks.

Rural Credits.

Of equal importance with the question of currency reform is the question of rural credits or agricultural finance. Therefore we recommend that an investigation of agricultural credit societies in foreign countries be made, so that it may be ascertained whether a system of rural credits may be devised suitable to conditions in the United States.

We renew the declaration in our last platform regarding the conservation of our natural resources and the development of our waterways.

Law Reform.

We recognize the urgent need of reform in the administration of civil and criminal law in the United States, and we recommend the enactment of such legislation and the promotion of such measures as will rid the present legal system of the delays, expense and uncertainties incident to the system as now administered.

We favor the establishment of the parol post or postal process, and also the extension of the rural delivery system as rapidly as practicable.

Bishop and Miss Cecelia Brattan.

—The Fourth of July was a quiet one in Princess Anne. The stores were all closed as were also the banks and other places of business. The postoffice was open at certain hours for the opening and dispatch of the mail. The only thing that had a holiday ring was an occasional fire cracker from the hands of Young America. In the afternoon the colored lodge of Odd Fellows with a brass band and fife and drum corps, accompanied by a number of children, gave a parade through some of the streets of the town. At night there was quite a display of fireworks at private residences.

—An officer of the Ladies' Aid Society of Perryhawkin Christian Church, learning that Col. Knowles Crockey, Consulting Engineer and Mr. J. W. West, secretary for the Eastern Shore Power, Light & Railway Company, will arrive on the 10th of July, the day of their festival, basket supper, music by the Lutz Quartet and his noted lecture, "To Infidelity and Back," cordially invites the citizens residing along the proposed route for miles in Somerset and Worcester counties to meet these representatives on the festival ground at Perryhawkin, where there is shade, seats, and a suitable place for transacting business. The representatives of the railway company will be at the festival ground from 12.30 p. m., to 4 p. m.

—Miss Indiana R. Handy is visiting relatives at Elizabeth City, N. C.

—All things may come to those who wait, but they are apt to come from the discard.

—The Ladies' Card Club was entertained last Tuesday afternoon by Mrs. H. P. Dashiell.

—Mrs. Ambrose Matthews, of Rehoboth, is visiting friends and relatives in Williamsport, Pa.

—Mr. Charles J. Handy and son, Charles T. Handy, returned from the South on Saturday.

—The thief always suffers in the end. Many a fellow who steals a kiss is obliged to marry the girl.

—Miss M. Nettie Hoblitzell, of Baltimore, is visiting Mrs. Robert J. Maddox, on Beckford avenue.

—Masters Randolph and Percy Maddox will leave this week for Belair, Md., to remain until September.

—Mrs. Oliver T. Beauchamp and son, Sydney, spent a part of last week in Snow Hill as guests of Mrs. William F. Johnson.

—Mr. Wm. Collins, of Crisfield, spent the Fourth in Princess Anne at the home of his mother, Mrs. Daniel Collins, on Main street.

—Mrs. Ada L. Pinto and Miss Lydia E. Long, of Philadelphia, Pa., are visiting their brother, Mr. Chas. W. Long, near Princess Anne.

—Miss Verna Ferebee and sister, Margaret, have left their home, at Elizabeth City, N. C., after a short visit to relatives in Somerset county.

—Rev. C. T. Wyatt, of Cambridge, was the guest of Rev. J. Howard Gray last Friday. Mr. Wyatt made an address at Deal's Island on the Fourth.

—The County Commissioners of Worcester county have struck the levy for 1912. The county rate is $1.00. The largest amount provided for in the levy is that for public schools, $40,000.00. The taxable basis of the county is $9,712,291.00.

—A very pleasant launch party on the waters of the Manokin was indulged in on the Fourth by the following young people: Misses Edna and Louise Muir, Edna Heath, Mary Dixon, Mae Lloyd, Madeline Hayman, Messrs. Edwin Hayman, Walter L. Walker, George P. Pollitt, Earle Waller, Harrel H. Richardson.

—A festival will be held on the lawn of Mr. I. Henry Hall, about one mile from Marion, on Wednesday, July 17th. Supper will be served, with all the delicacies of the season. Refreshments in abundance. Proceeds for the benefit of Marion Baptist Church. If the day is unfavorable, the festival will be on the day following.

—Dr. A. G. Boyajian and his brother S. G. Boyajian, will give a concert at the M. E. Church, Oriole, on the evening of July 9th; at Mt. Vernon on July 10th and Rock Creek on July 11th. These young men are Armenians from from Turkey and are endeavoring to make enough money to get an education in this country.

—The batteau Ralph Webster that sunk in the Nanticoke channel opposite Sandy Island, April 1st, loaded with oysters shells was raised and floated June 28th, by Capt. Cable Evans, of Ewell, and was returned to the owner Capt. Thomas Bradshaw, of Deal's Island. The boat was damaged but little to be under the water so long.

—The July Term of the Circuit Court for Somerset County convened yesterday (Monday) morning, Judge H. L. D. Stanford on the bench. But little business was transacted. The hearing of the injunction case in connection with alleged irregularities in the sale of Pocomoke City bonds, set for next Thursday at Princess Anne, was postponed until next week when it will be taken up at Snow Hill.

Wm. K. Robinson, Charles E. Robinson, J. Francis Brittingham, Walter Long, Richard Dale, Hugh Koehler, Hayward Marshall, Robert F. Brattan, W. Stewart Fitzgerald, Walter Young, James Taylor and Merton Stevens.

—Mr. Milton L. Veasey has a corps of workmen engaged in tearing down his brick building on Market street next to the Pocomoke City National Bank. On the site will be erected a handsome three-story brick storehouse which will be equipped with all the modern improvements. This new building, when completed, will be occupied by Mr. Thomas F. Hargis as a department store, he having leased the same for a term of years. From what we have heard of the specifications of the new building we would say it is to be one of the finest and most up-to-date storehouses on the Shore and will undoubtedly be a credit to our town. It is centrally located and we can see no reason why Mr. Hargis should not succeed in his undertaking. —Worcester Democrat.

The County Levy for 1912

The County Commissioners of Somerset County last Tuesday completed the work of arranging the levy for the year 1912. The county rate was fixed at $1.07 on the $100, which with the State rate of 23¢ cents, makes the rate $1.30¢. The taxable basis is $7,651,575.00.

The largest items in this levy are the following: Public schools, $27,000.00; public roads, $20,000.00; elections, $5,255.57. The provision for public schools is an increase of $3,000 over last year and that for elections is more than double the amount for last year. Much of this expense is due to the new primary election law.

The total amount of incidental expenses is $14,908.69 and of general appropriations, $73,963.16, or a total of $88,871.85.

The Hero of Somerset

A word of praise and fond recollection!

At a critical stage of the convention proceedings, or at the psychological moment, let us say, Joshua W. Miles, of the Maryland delegation, showed himself possessed of the instinct and the courage and the appreciation of public sentiment which enabled him to do the right thing.

When, on Saturday, June 29th, he stood on his chair and in a voice that reached the uttermost corners of the big building thundered out, "I vote for Woodrow Wilson!" he showed himself a mighty good politician. He had the presence, he had the lungs and he had the nerve. There were others in the delegation with him, but he "beat them to it."

The crowd cheered him for half an hour, and he deserved the cheers. —Baltimore Sun.

A Bright Young Lady

Miss Bernie May Walls, daughter of Mr. A. M. Walls, formerly of Somerset but now of Salisbury recently graduated from the shorthand department of the Beacom Business College, of Salisbury, with the distinction of having made the best time of any of the 5,000 students who have attended the Beacom Schools. The average time required to complete this course is from thirty to thirty-five weeks, and Miss Walls in ten weeks earned her diploma, having passed three tests, each given at the rate of 100 words a minute in shorthand and one test at the rate of 50 words a minute in typewriting. Miss Walls graduated at the Princess Anne High School in 1911.

Death of Capt. James D. Wood

Capt. James D. Wood, Adjutant General of the Iron Brigade under General Meredith and General Bragg, died at the Minnesota Soldiers' Home June 24th, in the 80th year of his age. Mr. Wood was born in New York state and came to Princess Anne in early manhood and was editor of the Somerset Union for a short time. He was married to Miss Henrietta Dashiell, daughter of the late Capt. Theodore Dashiell, of this town, in June 1857. The following year he moved to La Crosse, Wisconsin. At the outbreak of the Civil War he joined the Federal Army and remained in the service until the close of the war. Capt. Wood is survived by his widow and one daughter.

B. C. Conner New Seminary Head

A deadlock of hours was broken last Friday evening when Rev. B. C. Conner, presiding elder of the Danville district of the Central Pennsylvania Methodist Conference, was elected president of Dickinson Seminary, Williamsport, Pa., to fill the vacancy caused by the elevation of William Perry Eveland to the missionary bishopric.

Mr. Conner is a native of Somerset county, his early life having been spent at Tull's Corner, near Marion. He is a member of the well-known Conner family of that neighborhood.

Special Moonlight Excursion

The N. Y., P. & N. R. R. will operate a special moonlight excursion from Pocomoke, Crisfield, Delmar and intermediate points to Ocean City, Md., and return on Thursday, July 18th. Special train leaves Crisfield 7 p. m. Passengers from Pocomoke, Costen and Delmar will use regular trains to and from Salisbury and special train from there to Ocean City and back to Salisbury. Special Train leaves Ocean City returning 9.30 p. m. Fare for the Round Trip $1.00. For further information inquire of agents and see dodgers which have been distributed.

—Preaching at Friendship Methodist Protestant Church, West, on Sunday, July 14th, at 10.30 a. m., by the pastor Rev. H. E. Norris. Subject, "The Wisdom of Christ, or the Voice of Conscience."

Soloist for Celebration

Mrs. J. Milton Davidson, of Boothwyn, Pa., formerly of Dover, was selected by the Independence Day committee of Chester, Pa., as soloist for the celebration there on the Fourth.

Mrs. Davidson was formerly Miss Miriam Sheppard, daughter of the late Rev. C. F. Sheppard. She is well known in Princess Anne.

Fire At Fruitland

On Monday morning of last week a fire in the residential section of Fruitland, a progressive little village two miles and a half from Salisbury, destroyed two residences and did considerable damage to several others. The damage is estimated to be $9,000.

Smoke was discovered pouring from the home of J. C. B. Chatham, and upon breaking in the house, it was a mass of flames. A bucket brigade was summoned by the ringing of the church bells.

The home of J. B. C. Chatham in which the fire originated was entirely destroyed; loss, $4,000. E. G. Clark's home was also totally destroyed; loss, $4,000. The two adjoining houses, owned by Long & Sons, were damaged to the extent of $4,000 each. The home of A. H. Hayman was also slightly damaged.

"An Evening With the Blind"

A unique and interesting concert will be given in the Auditorium, Princess Anne, Wednesday evening, July 10th, at eight o'clock. This concert will be given by people who are blind but who are artists in their respective lines of endeavor.

The proceeds of this concert which will be given under the auspices of the Princess Anne Chapter of the State organization, known as the Maryland Association of Workers for the Blind, will be used to pay the travelling expenses of a teacher whose duty it will be to seek the blind of this county and teach those who cannot for some important reason attend the school or workshop for the blind at Baltimore.

The following artists will take part in this entertainment: Mr. Benjamin Feinstein, barytone soloist; Mr. Elmer A. Vogts, pianist and violinist; Mr. W. C. Sherlock, humorist and monologist. This concert should receive the cordial and hearty support it richly deserves as the object for which it is given is an eminently worthy one. Those who are so unfortunate as to lose their sight can if educated and trained become useful citizens. Without this training they must necessarily remain idle, and idleness combined with blindness inevitably leads to misery and despair.

Forty-one Killed in #### Railroad Wreck

Forty-one persons were killed and between 50 and 60 injured at Gibson, three miles east of Corning, N. Y., last Thursday morning, when a west-bound Lackawanna passenger train from New York, due to arrive at Corning at 4.47, composed of two engines, a baggage car, three Pullmans and two day coaches, in the order named, was run into in a fog by an express train due at Corning at 5.14 A. M. Many of the victims were holiday excursionists bound to Niagara Falls, who had boarded the train at points along the line.

The wreck was the worst in the history of the road. Its cause, according to Engineer Schroeder, of the express, was his failure to see signals set against his train, because of the fog. The wrecked train stood on the main track, blocked by a crippled freight train. The signals Engineer Schroeder declared he could not see were just around a curve. The flying express plunged past them and crashed into the rear of the other train, carrying death to more than two score of its passengers.

Why the Buick is the Best!

The government invited all the leading manufacturers of cars priced from $900 to $2000 to submit a car in competition to a committee of mechanical experts. The cars were driven to the designated place and the drivers dismissed. The examination was then made with no representative of any of the cars present. Motor for motor, shaft for shaft, bolt for bolt, the cars were compared, tested and appraised by the government experts. One by one cars were eliminated until but one remained. It was THE BUICK. Of the seventeen or eighteen cars submitted THE BUICK alone stood the rigid tests of quality and construction upon which the examination was based. This car was at once turned over to the government for immediate service.

Mr. Johnson's Three Trunks

By M. QUAD
Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.

Lemuel Johnson was twenty-two years old and had just finished the carpenter's trade when he got married. He earned good wages, lived as happy as the average and nothing of moment occurred until the week he was forty years old.

A farmer living six miles from the village wanted a barn built, and one evening the carpenter hired a horse and buggy to drive out there. This was the last seen of him for twenty-three years. An hour after starting the horse came back alone and with the lines dragging. Of course the inference was that Mr. Johnson had been thrown out on the road, and searchers started out. By the light of their lanterns they found where the rig had been turned around, but there was no man there with broken bones.

There was a search that lasted for months, but not the slightest clue could be found. Mr. Johnson had vanished from sight as if he had been pulled up into the air. A good many wise men gave thought to the mystery, but it was a stone wall for all of them. The carpenter had no enemies, was at peace with his wife, and that he should have been fatally assaulted by robbers and his body buried was not to be thought of. After five years his widow married again and after ten she died.

Lemuel Johnson had left three brothers and two sisters behind him. In time all married and all had homes in and around the village. After those twenty-three years Moses came riding into the town on the stage one day. He was now an old man, gray haired, bowbacked and none too spry. He had three heavy trunks with him. There were but few to remember him, and for three or four days he was looked upon with suspicion.

As to why and how he disappeared Lemuel explained that as he was driving along the highway a sudden faintness overcame him and he must have pitched out on his head. When he recovered consciousness he had forgotten his name and all else in the past. He had a dim remembrance of walking across fields and traveling by cars and of being called by another name. One morning after twenty-two years had passed, he woke up clear headed. He was Lemuel Johnson again. He learned from others that he had been living under the name of Joe White and had been a miner and prospector and mine owner for many years. He was a rich and respected man.

As soon as Lemuel came to himself he felt a longing for wife and home. He didn't start off with a rush. He waited to settle up his business and then came along by easy stages.

The restored missing man didn't weep over the death of his wife. He just arranged to settle down and take comfort for the rest of his days. He thought he would board at the tavern, but the three brothers and two sisters, all of whom were alive and kicking, cried out:

"Lemuel, we can't permit it. You must come and live with us. You poor man, but the best is none too good for you after what you have gone through."

"But I shan't pay board," announced the returned wanderer.

"Of course not."

It was plain to all that Mr. Johnson was a crank before he started in, but an old man with three trunks full of cash and only a few years to live must be allowed special privileges. There were three children in the first family, and they were kept well scared to death. Even the dog did not dare bark. Lemuel demanded canned oysters, fried chicken, boiled eggs, custard pie, raisin cake, currant jelly, raspberry jam, porterhouse steak, lobster and whatever might be called for at a first class hotel.

As he lived with one family so he lived with all. He had an iron rule. If he wanted the whole family to get up at midnight and sing a hymn with him and play the tune on the parlor organ, out of bed they had to come.

When the wanderer first came back it didn't look as if he would live the year out. In fact, a doctor examined him and reported:

"He is on his last legs, and you might as well order his coffin. I never have seen a human system so shattered."

That shattered system began to pick right up next day, however. Lemuel straightened his back, got the bow out of his legs and in a few weeks was jumping fences to show that nothing ailed him. Instead of stepping off at sixty-four, he was as chirp as a cricket at seventy.

Not one cent of his own money did the old man use. He made his relatives hand over. He smoked good cigars, ate a heap of candy and wore good clothes. A thousand times the family he was stopping with wanted to boot him out; but, alas, there were four other families ready to take him in.

Lemuel was killed by accident, an old tree falling on him on a windy day. When he had been buried the brothers and sisters examined the three trunks. They had agreed to make a fair divide in case no will was to be found. The contents of the trunks consisted of old papers and bricksbats. No will—no money. Lemuel had simply played it low down on the whole band. The minister conducting the funeral said he trusted that Brother Johnson had gone to heaven. All the surviving relatives trusted he hadn't. In fact, they wanted to bet he hadn't.

TESTED AND PROVEN

There is a Heap of Solace in Being Able to Depend Upon a Well-Earned Reputation.

For months Princess Anne readers have seen the constant expression of praise for Doan's Kidney Pills, and read about the good work they have done in this locality. What other remedy ever produced such convincing proof of merit?

John W. Heath, farmer, R. F. D., No. 2, Princess Anne, Md., says: "The cure Doan's Kidney Pills made for me nearly five years ago and my former public endorsement of this remedy still holds good. For more than a year I suffered from distressing attacks of backache and at times my back became so weak I could hardly attend to my work. The kidney secretions were also irregular in passage and there was sediment in them. Having heard so much about Doan's Kidney Pills, I obtained a box at Omar A. Jones' drug store and gave them a trial. They helped me at once and thus convinced me of their merits."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents, Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States. Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

A Grouchy Clerk.

The clerk in the postoffice was grouchy. We suspected that he had been out late the night before, and we trod lightly and spoke gently, but in spite of our decent precautions he snarled at us. We decided that it would be better not to address him at all. So we approached the stamp window at which he presided and mutely pushed two copper pennies across the counter.

"Well, what do you want?" he growled, looking at the coppers and then at us.

"A house and lot," we stammered, taken off our guard, "but the bedroom windows must face the south, and the garden should"—

But he swore frightfully and, handing us a two cent stamp, merely exclaimed:

"Get out of the line; there are other customers!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Wily Sexton.

Visitors to the Old North church are shown through the historic old building usually by an elderly man who seems obsessed with a love for the church. His fund of reminiscences is refreshing, and the most interesting thing he recounts is the story of how the lanterns were placed in the belfry. According to his version of the historic incident, the sexton overheard some English officers talking in the house he lived in and immediately hung the lanterns. Returning to his room, he saw that his shoes were caked with mud and hid them, replacing them with a dry pair. The officers, after they learned that a signal had been hung from the belfry, rushed to the room of the sexton, but, finding his shoes dry, became convinced that some one else had hung the lanterns and then locked all the doors of the edifice.—Boston Journal.

Hindu Weddings and Burials.
The expenses of a Hindu wedding come upon the bride's father, and they are so great that a family sometimes is ruined or impoverished for many years by the marriage of a daughter. The next most costly affair to the Hindu is the burial services. Children Cry FOR FLETCHER'S CASTORIA

Girls Not Wanted.

In India there are more males than females. The proportion of the sexes at birth is not very different from that in European countries, "but subsequent conditions are relatively less favorable to female life." Even today female children are not wanted. Not very many years ago the practice of killing them off was common, and, while this horror has been very generally abolished now, the girl babies are thought little of and neglected if nothing worse. They are neither so well clothed nor so well fed as the boys and if ill are not well looked after. Regarding this question an English official in India related a conversation with a middle aged Punjabi gentleman who had been compelled as a boy to assist at the murder of his infant sister and whose aunt had had seven daughters and killed them all. He was careful to add that his family has since abandoned such practices. In Gujarat there is a proverb that "the parents look after the boys and God looks after the girls."

A Fish With False Teeth.

Cap Wilson, the inventor of many different kinds of spoons as there are fish that will take them, has discovered a new lure for catfish. He was on an outing among the sloughs of the Sacramento river when one of his companions found him on the deck of his launch, roaring loudly.

"What's the matter?" he inquired. "Matter! Huh! There's a twenty dollar catfish down under this boat—an' I'm a-goin' to get him if I have to seine him out!"

"How do you figure a catfish worth $20?"

"This a-way: I was standin' right here a-cleanin' my new set of false teeth when he came up to the top, looked at me an' opened his mouth. I grabbed for the toothpick to gaff him an' dropped the teeth. Plump they went, right square into his mouth. Now he's down there crackin' crabs with my teeth, an' I got to eat clam chowder under a salmon spoon."—Saturday Evening Post.

The Mace.

The mace was originally a potent weapon of offense, originating doubtless in that earliest and most common weapon the wooden club. It was an essential part of a knight's accoutrement, being useful at close quarters. For ready convenience it was hung at his saddlebow. Says an ancient poem:

And with his heavy mace of steel
Then he gave the kingly his dele.

The besague and baston were varied forms of the mace. The mace used on horseback was a small weapon, usually of steel. That used on foot was much longer and commonly of wood, with head armed with iron rings and spikes. It was carried by the escort of magistrates and others as a ready protection against violence. As society quieted down and its original use fell into abeyance the thing assumed the ornamental appearance it now has. It now being carried in a mere honorary form.—London Notes and Queries.

Why He Chased Them Off.

Two bank presidents on a summer vacation were patiently fishing from the mossy bank of a quiet stream when two farmer's lads came out of a nearby field and, after watching the fishermen awhile, began to play tag in the grass.

Annoyed by their gambols, one of the financiers chased the lads away and returned to his task.

"Good idea!" commented the other angler. "Boys scare the fish away." "Oh, that wasn't why I chased them off!" rejoined his companion. "But I always dread a run on the bank."—Judge's Library.

A Batch of Bulls.

There are several interesting bulls in the following serious paragraph that appeared one time in an Irish newspaper: "To rob a man of his purse and then maltreat him for not having it would pass muster among pitiless brutal crimes, but to kill and slay a man to the point of death and then murder him for not dying quick enough is one point better in the catalogue of human infamy. It is enough to make Irishmen set their teeth and talk silently in groups."

The Byplay Minstrels.

"Mr. Interlocutor, can you tell me the difference between a kiss and a sewing machine?"

"No, Mr. Bones. I cannot. Please tell us the difference between a kiss and a sewing machine."

"One seems so nice and the other seems nice."

"Mr. Ogo Soakim will now render that beautiful ballad entitled 'When Mother Found Her Rat in Grandpa's Beard.'—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Cheering Her Up.

Small Boy—"Don't you have good times when you travel in the train?" Mrs. Grabber—"Why, dear?" Small Boy—"Well, mamma said you was double faced, and I think it would be a awful lot of fun to look out of two windows at once."—London Telegraph.

The Soft Answer.

"Don't you believe a soft answer turns away wrath? I tried it the other day with my wife."

"And she got mad?" "Did she? She asked me what her biscuits tasted like, and I merely said 'mush.'—Baltimore American.

A Surprised Japanese Husband.

Out of burning jealousy Torakichi Katano rained blows with a club on his wife. Tchi, who was asleep in bed. The blows rendered the woman senseless, and this surprised the brute of a husband.—Japan Times.

WHIMSICAL WILLS

Human Nature as Shown in Queer Requests and Bequests.

FEAR OF PREMATURE BURIAL

This Dread Has Often Been the Cause of Curious Provisions in Last Testaments—The Grave of a Man Who Disliked the Society of Women.

The remarkable will of a man who died not long ago directing the undertaker to stab him through the heart after he had been pronounced dead by his physician is not a unique one. The fear of being buried alive has driven many a man to stipulate in his will that extraordinary steps be taken to make sure of death.

Thus, for instance, a magnate of Plymouth, England, decreed by his will that his wife should cut off one of his toes or fingers to make sure he was dead, adding that he made the request so that "as she had been troubled with one old fool she will not think of marrying a second."

The will of Lord Lytton contained special directions as to the examination of his body in order to provide against the possibility of his being buried while in a trance, which appeared to be an apprehension of his.

A farmer of Hertfordshire, England, who died in 1720, was so certain that his lethal slumber was to be not really death, that he inserted in his will his written wish that, "as he was about to take a thirty years' nap, his coffin might be suspended from a beam in his barn and by no means nailed down." He, however, permitted it to be locked, provided a hole were made in the side, through which the key might be pushed, so that he might let himself out when he awoke. His nephew, who inherited the property, obeyed his whim and did not bury the coffin till 1751, allowing him an extra year of grace.

The Sieur Boty, who died in 1845 at the age of ninety-six, said in his will: "Eight and forty hours after my decease I desire that a post mortem examination be made, that my heart be taken out and placed in an urn, which shall be entrusted to M. Baudouin (the undertaker). In conformity with an arrangement between him and myself my heart is to be conveyed to a museum in the department of La Mayenne and there to be deposited, as agreed."

Robert, the famous Earl of Melfort and Leicester, one of the early crusaders in the holy land, died in 1118 in the abbey of Preaux, where his body was buried, but his heart was conveyed to the hospital at Brackley, there to be preserved in salt. Isabella, daughter of the Earl of Pembroke, who died in 1230, ordered her heart to be sent in a silver cup to her brother, then abbot of Tewkesbury, to be buried there before the high altar. The heart of John Balliol, lord of Barnard castle, who died in 1293, was by his widow's desire inclosed in an ivory casket richly enameled with silver.

But all these examples, strange as they may be, are not especially remarkable among the countless numbers of curious wills which are recorded through many generations.

There is, for example, the will of a rich old bachelor, who, incensed at what he considered the attempts of his family to put him under the yoke of matrimony, vented his spleen on the whole sex of women by saying in his will: "I beg that my executors will see that I am buried where there is no woman interred, either to the right or to the left of me. Should this not be practicable in the ordinary course of things I direct that they purchase three graves and bury me in the middle one of the three, leaving the two others unoccupied."

John Reed, gaslighter of the Walnut Street theater, Philadelphia, filed that post for forty-four years. There is not on record a single performance at the theater at which he was not present. He never aspired to appear on the stage in his lifetime, but he was not without his mute ambitions, and before he died he contrived ingeniously to make sure of assuming a Shakespearean role after his death. A clause in his will read:

"My head is to be separated from my body immediately after my death, the latter to be buried in a grave, the former, duly macerated and prepared, to be brought to the theater, where I have served all my life, and to be employed to represent the skull of Yorick, and to this end I bequeath my head to the properties."—New York Sun.

The Fingerless Glove.

How early did mankind think of the convenience of the fingerless glove which modern babies, fishermen and Alpine climbers appreciate so greatly? We hear little of gloves in ancient times, and in most cases it is obvious that they had fingers. These worn by the secretary of the younger Pilius used when he visited Vesuvius so that he might keep on jotting down notes in spite of the cold, must have been fingered no less than those of the glutton in Athenaeus who wore gloves at table so that he might handle the meat with hot and get in advance of his bare-handed fellow diners. One of the earliest known wearers of a glove with only a thumb is an Anglo-Saxon lady known in Planché's "History of British Costume." Her gloves exactly resemble a modern baby's.

My present to all who build is that the owner should be an ornament to the house, and not the house to the owner.—Cicero.

Danger to the Dish.

Next time you shave cast your eye along the edge of the razor. It appears to be a perfectly straight line, but look at it under a microscope and you will see that it is really rough and jagged like a fine toothed saw. In the same way a dish seems to present a perfectly smooth, unbroken surface. Through a microscope, however, you will see a multitude of tiny cracks, little hollows in the surface and minute flaws where a bit has been chipped. These flaws are the home and incubator of disease germs. A chipped place only one-hundredth of an inch square will harbor many hundreds of typhoid bacilli. Cracks in dishes or glasses that are so large as to be visible to the unaided eye harbor thousands of all kinds of germs. Ornamentation on the handles of cutlery provides the same breeding grounds, and this is why it is better to have only perfectly plain knives, forks and spoons. Disease germs live through anything except poisons or a long immersion in boiling water. They are not much disturbed by freezing.—Pearson's.

Backville Street, Dublin.

Dublin is one of the finest cities in the British empire, and its public buildings are second to none. Two very different men have united in its praise. Goldwin Smith said that Phoenix park was the most beautiful of all the parks he had seen, and Greville, even more enthusiastic, wrote: "I am greatly struck by the fineness of the town of Dublin and of its public buildings especially. Dublin is, for its size, a finer city than London, and I think they beat us hollow in their public buildings. We have no such square as Merrion square nor such a street as Backville street." Sala in a "Bell of Shandon" vein reviewed all the great streets he had promenade from the Newski prospect to Pizzardi. Of them all he says by far the finest is Backville street, Dublin, as it stretches from the river Liffey to the rotunda and its gardens.

Breaking It Gently.

He is a rather serious minded boy who has more sense of responsibility than many grown persons. So when he was sent to his grandmother's to break the news of her aged sister's death he did so with much gravity and no little self importance.

"Now, Alfred," his mother said, "you mustn't tell grandma suddenly, because it might shock her, even though she knew Aunt Martha was ill. Tell it to her gently."

"All right," assented Alfred, starting out on his mission with mingled solemnity and eagerness.

Arrived at his grandmother's house, he greeted her with a sober "Hello!" and then proceeded to "break the news," by saying: "Aunt Maria's dead, grandma, but you mustn't feel bad, 'cause she was pretty old, anyhow. You'll be the next one, I s'pose."

Cairo and Islam.

The Earl of Cromer, not without reason, described the Ulema of Cairo as the "guardians of the citadel of Islam." No other city in the Moslem world has so many students of Moslem theology and law or pours out such a flood of Moslem literature as does Cairo. Millions of pages of the Koran, commentaries by the hundred thousand and scores of books attacking the Christian faith, defending Islam or propagating its teaching come ceaselessly year after year from the Moslem presses of this great center of Moslem learning. Books printed in Cairo are read by the campfires of the Sahara, in the market place of Timbuktu, under the very shadow of the Kaaba, and are treasured in the mosques of Java and western China.—Argonaut.

Origin of One Graveyard.

The family of a member of parliament from Yorkshire has a private graveyard and has had it for several generations. The founder of it was a Quaker, and the rector of the parish in which he lived said to him after a dispute on religious matters, "Well, if you don't come to church when you are alive you will when you are dead." But the Quaker thought otherwise and founded the burial place, which is used to this day.

An Astronomical Mirror.

One of the most remarkable scientific instruments yet devised is that constructed by Professor R. W. Wood to aid the work of astronomers. This is an astronomical mirror, the reflecting surface of which is revolving mercury elaborately protected against vibrations, and it magnifies in proportion to the speed of its revolutions. A metal dish containing mercury and turning on bearings carries on its edge a series of magnets. Encircling, but not touching them, is an iron ring. By motor power this ring is made to revolve upon bearings separate from those of the mercury container, but its magnets, attracting those on the container's edge, cause the latter also to revolve. Centrifugal force compels the mercury to form a concave surface, perfect so long as free from jars. This apparatus is sunk in a well fourteen feet deep and set upon a solid foundation to eliminate all ordinary shocks.—Harper's.

Kangaroo Mother's Bravery.

During a severe drought in a certain section of Australia the owner of a country station was sitting one evening on the porch when he saw a kangaroo lingering about, alternating approaching and retreating from the house, as if half in doubt and fear what to do. At length she approached the water pails and, taking a young one from her pouch, held it to the water to drink. While her baby was satisfying its thirst the mother was quivering all over with apprehension, for she was but a few feet from the porch where one of her foes was watching her. The baby, having finished drinking, was replaced in the pouch, and the old kangaroo set off at a rapid pace. The spectator was so much impressed by the astonishing bravery of the affectionate mother that he made a vow—and kept it—never again to shoot a kangaroo.

A Genial Old Duke.

Duke Max of Bavaria had no greater delight than leaning over the counter of some small shopkeeper, talking gossip or purchasing toys for his great-granddaughters in Austria. Innumerable stories are told illustrating his character. B. H. Goldschmidt, a wealthy banker of Frankfurt, was once journeying to Vienna. Opposite on the velvet cushion of the first class car sat an old gentleman whose dress and looks betrayed no uncommon rank. "Are you on a pleasure trip?" asked the banker's vis-a-vis. "Yes," answered the latter; "I am going to visit my daughter, who, thank God, fortunately married the Banker Wiener in Vienna." "How strange," replied his companion. "The incentive to my trip is the same. I am going to visit my daughter in Vienna. Thank God, she, too, is rather fortunately married to the emperor of Austria."

Royal Superstition.

Canterbury cathedral, like most great cathedrals, is decorated with innumerable niches for statues. At Canterbury a series of these niches is occupied with statues of kings and queens of England, and there are only four niches left unoccupied. An old tradition has it that when all the niches are filled the throne of England will come to an end.

Queen Victoria was approached with a view to a statue of herself being placed in one of the four remaining niches, but her late majesty was aware of the old tradition and refused. One wonders whether in the future there will be four monarchs of England sufficiently indifferent to superstition to defy the tradition and allow their effigies to fill the unoccupied spaces.—London Answers.

French Revolutionary Calendar.

Beginning with Sept. 22 the tour of months in the French revolutionary calendar was Vendemiaire, Brumaire, Frimaire, Nivose, Pluviose, Ventose, Germinal, Floreal, Prairial, Messidor, Thermidor (Perividor) and Fructidor, which ended on Sept. 16. Then followed five days, the Sansculotides, dedicated as feasts of reason to Les Vertus, Le Genie, Le Travail, L'Opinion and Les Reconpenses. Decreed Nov. 21, 1793, this calendar was antedated to Sept. 22, 1792. It was abolished on Nivose 10. An xiv, corresponding to Dec. 31, 1805.

A Legal Stunt.

A suit having been brought against a defendant, his counsel interposed a demurrer that had the effect to throw it out of court. Soon afterward the same lawyer was elected to congress, and while at his post of duty he was surprised one day to receive a letter from his former client, saying: "I am sued again. Please send me another one of them things they call demurrers."—Case and Comment.

The Electoral Ticket

One of the first things to be considered by President Taft and his advisers at the outset of the campaign is the status of the electoral tickets named in the various states during the recent primaries.

The Republican managers are confronted by the fact that these electors were placed upon regular Republican tickets, and unless steps are taken to place other tickets in the field, they will be voted for in November, under the Republican emblem.

There are 10 or 12 states under the domination of progressive-Republicans, where the electors already are in the field nominated by state and district conventions under the sway of the Roosevelt people. Pennsylvania, Maryland and West Virginia are in this list.

Flinn, the new Pennsylvania boss, picked all these electors in the state convention that sent delegates at large to Chicago. He has threatened that every one of the Pennsylvania electors will vote for Roosevelt in the electoral college if they are elected. The Taft leaders will ascertain from each elector what he would do, and will obtain a new set of electors if necessary.

There may be litigation in courts on the subject. Having been nominated as regular Republicans in a regular Republican state convention, the electors might claim regularity and fight efforts to remove them. The suggestion now is that Flinn will appropriate these electors as the electors for the new Progressive party.

In most states it is possible for new electors to be put in the field by means of petitions filed with the state authorities, but if attempts are made to put these tickets under the Republican heading, the electors already nominated would be able to complicate things by going to the courts.

The policy of the Republican national committee under the leadership of its new chairman, who probably will be Charles D. Hiles, the President's private secretary, will be to sift the sentiments and records of every man named as an elector.

In many states Roosevelt will have to get into the running by petitions circulated among the people. In some states the number of signers is, as in New York, necessarily large. It is predicted that Roosevelt's managers will have a hard job getting 50,000 signers in that state. The cost, too, will be large.

The Roosevelt program is to hold state conventions of the Progressive party and nominate their electors and state and legislative tickets where they think they have a chance to win.

Comments on the Nomination

Joshua W. Miles—I came to this Convention to interpret the will of the people. That will, as interpreted in Maryland, was for the nomination of Speaker Clark for President. I respected the will of Maryland as expressed at the primaries in the whole state as long as there was a chance for Mr. Clark's nomination. When I became convinced that Mr. Clark could not be nominated I gave voice to the sentiment expressed at the primaries in my own county. That sentiment was for Governor Woodrow Wilson. I abide by my vote and by the result.

Congressman Covington—I voted for Speaker Clark as long as I thought he had a chance to win. Mr. Clark is my personal friend. I am under obligations to him. I would have been glad to have seen him nominated. I have no right to place a personal preference against the will of the people of my district. That will, as expressed at the primaries, was in favor of the nomination of Governor Wilson for President. I obeyed the will of the majority of the Democrats of the Eastern Shore. That is all.

Senator Rayner—The Maryland delegates were placed in an awkward position at the start. We were hosts of the greatest convention which ever assembled. We had to be fair, and we were fair. Mr. Bryan, who did not want the convention to be held in Baltimore, has told me that we could not have been fairer than we have been. This is a high compliment to Baltimore. There have been disagreements and differences in the Maryland delegation which I seriously and sincerely regret. I am not responsible for those differences. I am responsible for my own action only, and on that action I am willing to appeal to the people of Maryland. My action was justified by the action of the convention. I had been criticised by my colleagues in the Maryland delegation for expressing a legal opinion that we were bound to support Speaker Clark as a unit. I have no retraction to make from that opinion. The convention had already upset the unit rules, in other words, delegates have been released from state instructions and were at liberty to vote as they chose. In brief, the convention had really overruled my privately expressed opinion. I did not violate the Maryland instructions when I voted for Governor Wilson.

Blown From Airship

Five Men Meet Death

Sailing over the Atlantic Ocean, at Atlantic City, N. J., under perfect control, and in view of several thousand interested persons, the great airship Akron in command of Melvin Vaniman, with a crew of four men, exploded while more than 500 feet in the air last Tuesday. And shot down into the water a tangled mass carrying to their death this daring navigator and his companions. Death is believed to have come instantly to the five men.

In all the tragic history of disasters to airships or aeroplanes probably none was as sensational as that which brought to an end the greatest and most costly air-craft ever constructed on the Western Hemisphere. Built to withstand the storms of the Atlantic and to carry at least a dozen men across the ocean to Europe, the Akron went to her doom in calm weather. Those who went down with the big dirigible besides the intrepid Vaniman, who already had had one thrilling experience in an air ship on the ocean, were: Calvin Vaniman, his younger brother, Fred Elmer, George Bourillon, of Philadelphia, and Walter C. Gest, a friend of Vaniman's financial backer.

Dysentery is always serious and often a dangerous disease, but it can be cured. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy has cured it even when malignant and epidemic. For sale by all dealers.

NEWSPAPER COMMENTS

From the Philadelphia Press: After the most protracted struggle in the history of the Democratic party since it split asunder in 1860 the National Convention at Baltimore of 1912 has chosen Governor Woodrow Wilson as the standard bearer of the Democratic party against President Taft and possibly also against, ex-President Roosevelt running as a third party candidate.

Dispassionate opinion will doubtless concur in the judgment that it is the strongest nomination which the Democrats could have made.

There is no reason why all Democrats should not vote for Governor Wilson. He is a man of great natural force and ability, a student of governmental affairs, a Southerner by birth and a Northerner by choice of residence, and a Democrat by inheritance and mature conviction.

He has latterly adopted most of the "progressive" ideas. His "progressiveness" at least antedates Roosevelt's and he no doubt will gather in many votes that would otherwise go to Roosevelt should the latter persist in his third party designs.

Republicans will be gratified that President Taft's opponent is a man of personally high character, of patriotic purpose and of signal ability.

From the New York Herald: "Stripped of all the finer questions as to whether all the conservative Democrats are dishonest and all the radical saints, however Mr. Bryan would be denied admittance to the Delectable City if tainted himself by voting for the same candidate who fought the support of Charles F. Murphy, the fact stands out clearly that Governor Wilson is the candidate of the Democratic party for president, with the votes of the 'unclean' and the 'clean' cast for him."

"Hats off to the Governor! He has won and only congratulations will go to him from the Herald today. His work is cut out for him. He may not know it, but he is 'on his way,' and that way is the way of a radical of the radicals. During the preliminary campaign he was a conservative-radical in the East. But he was a radical-radical in the West, and but for the West he would not have been nominated at Baltimore."

"Henceforth the chips must fly even over the fence into the back yards of the 'interests.' There can be no coddling up to Mr. Ryan or Mr. Belmont or Mr. Morgan. There must be no olive branch, and to Colonel Harvey or Colonel Watterson or those other colonels in the army of publicists who have so adroitly striven to carry the party's burdens and write the party's proclamations."

From the Baltimore Sun: Of all the good things that can be said of the Democratic Convention and its outcome the chief is this, that the people ruled there.

The onrush of the Wilson sentiment was an amazing thing to watch. Champ Clark came to this city with a far larger number of delegates than that to the credit of any of his opponents. The politicians, the bosses, the men whose word in politics has been supposed to be law, were all on his side. They are the strategists, they the master tacticians, they the men who know how to turn defeat into victory. But here at Baltimore the victory in their hands was turned into defeat. That impartial, uncertain, much belittled thing known as public opinion mounted the stage, took charge of the proceedings, waved an enchanter's wand and behold! the nominee was Wilson and not Clark. There really seemed to be some magic about it. Clark supporters mounted the wooden stairs, passed through the doors of the hall, and, once inside, found themselves shouting for Wilson. Clark applause was started and soon found itself part of a Wilson demonstration. Out of delegations that seemed solid as granite for the Missouriian sprang upon men demanding a roll call in order that the friends of the New Jersey man therein might place themselves on record. Rarely, if ever, in the history of our national conventions has there been such a splendid and inspiring illustration of the contagious quality of a moral conviction. The people wanted Wilson and they made their wishes known.

From the Philadelphia Record: Woodrow Wilson, of New Jersey, nominated for President, means that Woodrow Wilson will be the next President of the United States. The selection made by the Democratic convention at Baltimore will meet the approval of a great majority of the voters of the country. The Governor of Pennsylvania's sister Commonwealth will proceed from New Jersey, where he has done so much to demonstrate the value of an honest, able and clear-headed man as a State executive, to the larger field at Washington, where as the head of a great nation he will not fail to give a satisfactory account of himself.

The delegates at Baltimore have made a splendid choice. They have offered not only to the voters of their own party, but to those of all parties who are sincere in their professions of a desire to be represented in the Presidency by an honest and able man, the needed opportunity to end the rule and destructive policies of the Republicans.

No party ever nominated a candidate for President more free to enter the Presidency as the impartial representative of the whole people. Woodrow Wilson would have been nominated on the first ballot at Baltimore had he been willing to deal in the usual political way for support, but he has kept himself free to be the representative of the whole people when he becomes their President.

"The Record" rejoices in the outcome of the Democratic convention. Our Democratic brethren of the country can place New Jersey's electoral vote in the Democratic column without waiting for the count of the vote, and they can with safety place that of Pennsylvania on the doubtful list, with the chances largely in favor of its being in the Democratic column this year for the first time in a Presidential contest since 1856.

The Cliff Dwellings

of the Mesa Verde

General description of the ancient cliff dwellings in the canyons of southwestern Colorado are contained in a circular entitled "General Information regarding the Mesa Verde National Park," recently issued by the Department of the Interior. In this park are about 800 cliff dwellings of which only the three largest have been repaired. The largest ruin, called Cliff Palace, stands about a thousand feet above the bottom of the canyon and 300 feet below the top of the ledge. All the houses connect and open into one another, the entire settlement forming a crescent about 300 feet in length from end to end.

As we contemplate these silent ruins it is hard to believe that at one time they resounded with the hum of industry, the laughter of children, the droning of priests, and the strident cry of the sentinels calling the warriors to battle. The dwellers of these abandoned communities have no written record, but the shape of the structures and the relics that have been dug from the debris of centuries give some idea of how these people lived and moved and had their being. The main houses were built on a ledge close to its front, and back of this was an open space that answered the purpose of a court, a street, a playground or a place for industrial pursuits, such as weaving and pottery making. At intervals along the front were towers and bastions and in the interior were kivas or secret chambers used for religious ceremonies. In every village were storehouses to provide a supply of provisions in times of crops.

"I Want Something that WON'T HURT MY FEET"

We hear that statement daily from women who "have such a time" getting a pair of shoes that needs no "breaking in" and we are glad to hear it, because this store sells the most easy-giving shoes in the world.

"Queen Quality" and "Boston Favorite" shoes are as pliant and as comfortable as your old shoes.

They are the only shoes using the Flexible "Wonder Worker Process" that slashes on the underside of the innersole a series of overlapping joints, not unlike the scales of a fish, both in appearance and flexibility.

This process makes the ordinary welted sole as pliant and elastic as that of a turn sole, yet more comfortable and more durable, in walking or standing, than the extreme thinness of the turn.

"Queen Quality" and "Boston Favorite" shoes come in all styles, in all leathers and in white canvas.

A SHOOTING AT POCOMOKE CITY

Contracter Shot in a Fight With a Merchant

A shooting affray occurred at the railroad depot at Pocomoke City last Wednesday morning, the participants in the affair being two of the most prominent citizens of the town.

Mr. William B. Duncan, who did the shooting, is a manufacturer of barrels and a leading property owner and business man. Mr. John W. Allen, the victim, is a contractor and was superintendent of the Good Roads construction at Pocomoke and is also one of the judges and registers of election of Worcester county.

There has been a bitter feeling between them for a number of years, several quarrels and personal encounters having taken place between them. The two men are close neighbors, living in the same square in the southwestern part of the city.

The particulars of the shooting, as far as can be learned, were that Duncan, while returning from the post-office, met Allen in front of T. B. Henderson's store on Clarke avenue, and a quarrel ensued, in which it is alleged Allen drew a knife and threatened Duncan's life. Duncan retreated into the store, while Henderson took hold of Allen and succeeded in quieting him to the extent that he went on to the depot.

Duncan returned to his home, and it is supposed armed himself and next made his appearance at the railroad crossing opposite the depot. Here he again encountered Allen, and the shooting immediately began.

The first shot entered the right shoulder low down; from the effect of it Allen staggered. The second shot entered the neck, and it is feared injured the spinal cord. It is very serious and might prove fatal. Upon receiving the second shot Allen fell upon the railroad crossing, where a number of persons who witnessed the shooting from the platform, hastened to his aid. Among them was Dr. Lee Hall, of Pocomoke City. Allen was carried to his home, which was near at hand, and Dr. Hall summoned Dr. N. B. Sartorius to assist him in attendance on the wounded man.

Soon after the shooting Duncan went to the office of Magistrate E. Hillman and gave himself up. The Justice after hearing his story placed him in the custody of officer Callahan, of the police force, to await the arrival of State's Attorney W. F. Johnson.

On Wednesday afternoon a hearing was held before Justice Hillman, State's Attorney William F. Johnson being present to represent the Commonwealth and Mr. Charles O. Melvin representing Mr. Duncan. At the conclusion of the testimony Mr. Duncan was held in the sum of $10,000 awaiting further developments. Mr. Duncan furnished the bond readily and repaired to his home.

Mr. Allen was carried to the Salisbury Peninsula General Hospital as soon as possible where he lies in a precarious condition.

Looking for Hospital Site

The site committee appointed some weeks ago by the commission for the Eastern Shore State Hospital for the insane met at Cambridge Tuesday afternoon. Those in attendance were Governor Goldsborough, Comptroller Harrington, Senator J. Hooper Bosley, Senator Jesse Price, Senator E. E. Goslin and William T. Warburton. The committee received proposals for sites and devoted a portion of the afternoon to inspection of some of the sites offered. The hospital will be located in Dorchester county, and a site near Hurlock or near Cambridge will be selected. The committee will continue the inspection of sites offered and report to the hospital commission.

Judge Gilmore S. Kendall Dead

Judge Gilmore S. Kendall died suddenly at his home in Eastville, Virginia, last Tuesday morning of heart trouble. He was 63 years of age. He was born in Northampton county, Va., and was educated at the University of Virginia. During his early life he taught school, was later clerk of the county court and was a member of the Constitutional Convention of the state. He is survived by a widow.

Dr. Conner Accepts Presidency

Rev. Benjamin C. Conner, Danville District superintendent, Methodist Episcopal Church, elected to the presidency of Dickinson Seminary, last Friday formally accepted. Rev. Dr. Gilbert will do Dr. Conner's work as district superintendent until next conference.

POLICE JUSTICES MUST GIVE WAY

Democrats To Surrender to Republicans is the Ruling of the Highest Court

In an opinion handed down last Wednesday by Judge John R. Pattison and concurred in by the Court of Appeals, those justices of the peace whose successors were not confirmed by the Senate and who have since held office, must step down.

These justices are Democrats. Their successors will be Republicans. Incidentally the opinion is a victory for Governor Goldsborough and sustains the legal view which he took when the Senate refused to confirm the appointments.

The case decided Wednesday was a test one. It came up to the Appellate Court from the Circuit Court for Anne Arundel County, whose opinion is reversed. The appeal was by Justice John N. Davis and John B. Wells, of Annapolis, and John S. Potee, of Brooklyn, all Democrats. By the decision they lose their places and will be supplanted by Republicans, Dennis Claude and James D. Feldmeyer in Annapolis, and A. Wolfram in Brooklyn. In point of service Justice Davis outranks his associates in Anne Arundel.

The decision affects those justices of the peace in other counties whose successors, appointed by Governor Goldsborough, were not confirmed. Several Democratic justices of the peace in Wicomico, Worcester, Dorchester and in other counties must give way to their Republican successors.

The legal phase of the failure to confirm turned on the question whether the terms of the justices of the peace are for two years and no longer or whether they shall serve until their successors shall have qualified. The Court of Appeals has sustained the former view. Vacancies are thus created in all the offices of the justices of the peace who were not reappointed or whose successors were not confirmed by the Senate. It is generally assumed that Governor Goldsborough will appoint those justices whose names he sent to the Senate. Attorney General Edgar Allan Poe contended that the justices served until their successors qualified. Senator Rayner, when attorney general, took the opposite view. Judge Pattison, in his decision, says:

"Section 13 of Article 2 of the Constitution, under which the question presented arises, as we have said, provides that the term of the offices therein mentioned, to which the same is applicable, shall commence at the time therein stated and continue for two years (unless removed from office), and until their successors, respectively, qualify according to law, except in cases otherwise provided for in the Constitution. Therefore, to make this section, in respect to the extent of the term to justices of the peace, or, in fact, to any other office, it must be shown that no provision has been made elsewhere in the Constitution for such term of office. This cannot be said of the term of office of justices of the peace, when by Section 42 of Article 4, it is expressly provided that justices of the peace shall hold their offices for two years."

Maryland's Credit Good

Ample evidence that the credit of Maryland stands high in the banking world, was furnished last Thursday, when the Board of Public Works disposed of an issue of $1,000,000, Good Roads bonds at an average figure above par. The bonds are of the series of 1912, in denominations of $1,000 each, bearing 4 per cent. of interest payable semi-annually, and maturing in 1927.

The sale of the bonds was distributed among six firms and the average of the bids was 100.21. A representative of one of the firms told the board this figure is five points above the price paid for New York State 4 per cent. bonds at a recent sale.

Death of Mr. James R. Purnell

Information was received here last Friday from Miss Andasia Purnell, formerly a teacher in the Princess Anne High School, that her father, Mr. James R. Purnell, who had been ill some time, had died the night previous. Mr. Purnell was a native of Berlin, but had resided in Snow Hill for many years. He was about 78 years of age. He is survived by his widow and one son, Mr. Robins Purnell, of New York, and two daughters, Misses Nannie and Andasia Purnell, of Snow Hill. Funeral services were held late last Saturday afternoon.

UNCLE SAM AFTER THE SLOW ONES

Notifies Us We Must Cut Off All Delinquent Subscribers and Swear to Statement

According to a notice received from the Post Office Department under date of July 1st, this paper cannot be mailed to subscribers, as at present, who are MORE THAN A YEAR IN ARREARS. The label on your paper shows the date to which you are paid. If your name does not continue on the mailing list, you will understand that it is not our fault but the rigidity of the Postal Law. The notice is as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT
THIRD ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL
Washington, July 1st, 1912.
Publisher MARYLANDER AND HERALD,
Princess Anne, Md.

Your attention is invited to amended paragraph 3, section 436, of the Postal Laws and Regulations, appearing in the December, 1911, Postal Guide, reading as follows:

"The right of publishers to extend in good faith, credit on subscriptions is recognized and will not be abridged and although all subscriptions are regarded as expiring with the period for which they were obtained, nevertheless, in order to give an opportunity to secure renewals, copies of their publications will be accepted for mailing as to subscribers at the usual second-class rates of postage for a period of one year from the date of the expiration of their subscriptions, unless such subscriptions be expressly renewed for a definite time, together with an actual payment of subscription or a bona fide promise of payment, will not be accepted at the pound rate, but will be accepted at transient second-class rate of one cent for each four ounce or fraction thereof, prepaid by stamps affixed."

The purpose of this regulation is to give publishers a reasonable opportunity to secure renewals of subscriptions, and at the same time relieve the postal service of the burden of carrying copies of publications as to subscribers at the usual second-class rates of postage to persons who are not such in fact.

In order that the Department may ascertain whether the regulation is being uniformly complied with, you are requested to furnish, with regard to the next issue of your publication, the information asked, sending it under cover of the inclosed official envelope, which requires no postage.

Respectfully,
JAMES J. BRITT,

Third Assistant Postmaster General.

This statement we are compelled to make under oath. KINDLY GIVE THIS MATTER YOUR ATTENTION AND BRING YOURSELVES WITHIN THE LIMIT EITHER WITH THE CASH OR A bona fide PROMISE TO PAY; or, better still, pay a year in advance and thus avoid future complications.

Annual Membership Meeting of Princess Anne Public Library

The annual membership meeting of the Princess Anne Public Library, incorporated, was held at the library room on Main street last Thursday afternoon. Mr. H. Fillmore Lankford presided and Mr. Charles B. Morris was chosen secretary. The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

Directors were elected for the ensuing year: Thomas H. Bock, president; Henry J. Waters, treasurer; Chas. B. Morris, secretary; C. M. Dashiell, H. L. D. Stanford, Columbus Lankford, Dr. C. W. Wainwright, R. F. Duer, Thomas Dixon, W. O. Lankford, J. T. Taylor, Jr., S. F. Dashiell, H. F. Lankford, W. H. Dashiell.

Mr. H. J. Waters, treasurer of the organization stated that the receipts since the library was established two years ago had been $436.95 and disbursements $481.16, leaving a balance in the treasury of $5.79. He further stated that the sum of $71.60 had been expended for books during the past year. There are now considerably over 1,000 volumes in the library and a membership of about 65.

The meeting of the board of directors will be held later, at which time the board of lady managers will be selected. Miss Amanda Lankford is the present efficient librarian.

Giles Elected Counsel to Shellfish Board

William Trickett Giles, former journal clerk of the State Senate and a well-known lawyer of Baltimore city, was elected counsel to the Shellfish Board at a meeting held Thursday afternoon. Mr. Giles succeeds Thomas H. Robinson, of Harford county, who held the position ever since the creation of the board. Mr. Giles is a former resident of Somerset county, and is an ardent advocate of the leasing system and believes that by surrounding it with proper safeguards revenue may be derived from oyster culture.

POWERFUL LIGHTS FOR CHESAPEAKE

Oil to be Supplanted by New Oil Vapor is Valuable Aid to the Mariner

In the notice to mariners, issued by the Bureau of Lighthouses and the Coast and Geodetic Survey, special attention is called to important changes affecting navigators in the Chesapeake Bay.

The intensity of the light at York Spit Light Station, Virginia, will on July 24 be changed by using incandescent oil vapor in the place of oil, increasing the luminous power from 210 to 300 candle power. With that exception, no other changes will be made.

The intensity of Sharps Island Light Station, on the main ship channel to Baltimore, about July 26 will be intensified by changing the luminant from oil to incandescent oil vapor, increasing the luminous power of the white light from 520 to 3,200 candlepower, and that of the red sector from 210 to 300 candles.

On July 5 the lights on Back Creek were established, and the buoys discontinued. Each light is shown 12 feet above the water from a three-pile horizontally slatted structure. Goose Point Light is now shown from a red structure in about one and three-quarters fathoms of water. Bay Tree Light is a fixed white light of about 45 candlepower, shown from a black structure, in about two fathoms of water. Candy Point Light is a fixed red light of about 12 candlepower, shown from a red structure, in about two fathoms of water. In all the Back Creek lights the apparatus are post lanterns, and are to be maintained continuously by the Norfolk Fisheries Corporation. On establishing of the lights Goose Point Buoy No. 2, Bay Tree buoy No. 1 and Candy Point buoy No. 4 will be discontinued.

York River, Virginia—Middle Ground light, to be established July 15, to mark the middle ground which extends from below Clay Bank wharf to above Almond's wharf. The light will be fixed white of about 45 candle power, shown about 16 feet above the water, from a three pile horizontally slatted black structure, standing in about two fathoms of water. Onancock Creek light on the east side of the Chesapeake Bay will be established about July 15. This light will be fixed white, of about 45 candle power, shown about 15 feet above the water, from a black three pile horizontally slatted structure, in about one and a quarter of water.

Death of Wm. H. McConkey

The many friends of Mr. Wm. H. McConkey were shocked to learn of his sudden death at the home of his sister, Mrs. W. Scott Whitford, Harford county, Maryland, on Thursday night of last week. Mr. McConkey had been in poor health for a number of years, and had left the Hospital about two weeks prior to his death.

Mr. McConkey had been a resident of Salisbury since 1884 and during his residence there had made a host of friends. He was connected with the N. Y. P. and N. Railroad having served as general agent for that road at the Salisbury station for years.

Mr. McConkey was about 52 years of age. During the greater portion of his residence in Salisbury he made his home with Mr. W. S. Gordy. He was a Director of the Farmers and Merchants Bank, a member of the Blue Lodge Chapter and Commandery. Mr. McConkey was of a sociable nature, kind hearted and popular with all and will be greatly missed by his many friends. His remains were interred at his home place close to Whiteford, Harford county.

Nichols-Wilson Wedding

The home of Mr. J. W. Wilson, of Quinton, was the scene of a very pretty wedding on Wednesday last, when his daughter, Miss Laura Belle Wilson, became the bride of Rev. J. L. Nichols, of Centerville, Md. The wedding was at high noon, and the bride's pastor, Rev. G. I. Humphreys, performed the ceremony. The groom was attended by his best man, Rev. J. W. Straughn, of Laurel, Del., and the bride, who was given away by her brother, Mr. John Wilson, of Norfolk, Va., entered the parlor to the strains of the wedding march played by Miss Bessie Jones.

After the ceremony was performed and congratulations were said the bridal party were taken to the station at Pocomoke and took the north bound express for New York and will go up the Hudson to Lake George, where they will spend their honeymoon before returning to the parsonage at Centerville, Md.

CHAFIN, Mrs. Belle A. Corbin LEAD "DRYS" AGAIN

Prohibition Standard Bearer of 1908 Nominated by Acclamation at Atlantic City

The national Prohibition Convention concluded its labors at Atlantic City, N. J., Friday night with the nomination of the party standard bearers of four years ago—Eugene W. Chafin, of Arizona, for President, and Aaron S. Watkins, of Ohio, for Vice-President. In each case the nomination was made by acclamation after a single ballot had indicated the preference of the delegates.

Four candidates for President were placed in nomination against Mr. Chafin. They were F. W. Emerson, of California; Finley C. Hendrickson, of Maryland; Aaron S. Watkins, of Ohio, and Andrew Jackson Houston, of Texas. Each in turn withdrew his name after the first ballot. Mr. Houston created enthusiasm by the statement that he would rather receive the lowest vote in the Prohibition convention than the highest in either the Democratic or Republican convention. The leading candidates against Mr. Watkins for Vice-President were Mr. Emerson, of California, and George L. Stockwell, of New York.

After a day of almost constant wrangling, interspersed now and then with hymns and prayers, the National Prohibition Convention Thursday overthrew the existing administration and elected Virgil G. Hinshaw, of Portland, Ore., as national chairman of the party.

Mr. Hinshaw, the new national chairman of the party, was a compromise selection as between Charles R. Jones, of Illinois, the present chairman, and W. G. Calderwood, of Minnesota, the leading insurgent candidate for the office. The insurgents early in the day won their fight to have the chairman elected by the convention instead of appointed by the National Committee. Mr. Hinshaw's election came on the fifth ballot Thursday night, after both Jones and Calderwood had withdrawn. Between ballots on the national chairmanship the convention devoted its time to the adoption of a platform. The delegates were in a turmoil most of the time, and occasionally there came cries of Gag rule and Tammany tactics from several of the delegations.

The platform of the party presented Thursday by the resolutions committee, headed by S. F. J. Sibley of Arizona, reaffirms the stand of the party on the liquor question and also advocates the following planks:

"Election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people.
"Provisional terms of six years and one term only.

"Uniform marriage and divorce laws.
"The extermination of polygamy and the complete suppression of the traffic in girls.

"Suffrage for women upon the same terms as to men.
"The initiative and referendum.

"The complete and permanent separation of church and State. We oppose the appropriation of public funds for any sectarian purposes.

"The abolition of child labor in the mines, workshops and factories, with the rigid enforcement of laws now flagrantly violated.

"Equitably graduated income and inheritance taxes."

The convention adjourned after a fight over a proposed change in the representation on the National Committee. A proposal that instead of each State having two representatives on the National Committee the representation be according to the size of the Prohibition vote, one member for each five thousand votes, aroused considerable opposition. The matter was referred to the new National Committee.

Death of Rev. W. S. Phillips

Rev. W. S. Phillips, a former pastor of Baltimore, died Wednesday morning in Newark, N. J., after a lingering illness from a complication of diseases. Dr. Phillips was a well-known member of the Maryland Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church and had a wide circle of friends in Maryland. At the time of his death he was pastor of First Methodist Protestant Church of Newark.

Before going to New Jersey he held the pastorate of Etaw Methodist Protestant Church, in Baltimore, and was for a long time pastor of the Methodist Protestant Church of Salisbury. He was the secretary of the Maryland Conference and a representative to the General Conference held in Baltimore in May. Dr. Phillips was also a trustee of Western Maryland College.

The body was taken to Salisbury Thursday and services were conducted at the grave.

FORT MCHENRY'S CAREER ENDED

Birthplace of "Star-Spangled Banner" Will be Abandoned

Revered in song and story, associated with the most patriotic deeds of American history, watch-dog of Baltimore for more than a century, Fort McHenry's military career will soon be ended.

According to news from Washington, Brig.-Gen. Erasmus M. Weaver, commander of the Coast Artillery division of the United States Army, in a few days will forward orders for the transfer of Coast Artillery Company One Hundred and Forty-one, the sole garrison of the fort, to Fort Strong in Boston harbor, Mass.

When the last bugle notes of the company shall have been sounded there, the historical old post no longer will be part of the coast defenses of the United States. While it will not be abandoned by the Government, which respects its career, it will be placed under the quartermaster's department, several caretakers being stationed there to keep the grass cut and the barracks painted. The grim old smooth-bored peeping above the embankment will be all that remain on the paraphernalia of war.

Borne on by the ceaseless march of years, a century has passed since the declaration of the war in which the fort played its master role. Known the world over as the time and scene of the writing of "The Star-Spangled Banner" by the young Georgetown lawyer, Francis Scott Key, the bombardment of Fort McHenry was one of the brave and strategic struggles of the War of 1812. The bombardment of Fort McHenry took place on Tuesday, September 12, 1814, and extended until the next morning, and "The Star-Spangled Banner" was written early on the morning of Wednesday.

There have been various stories as to the origin of the old fort. One recently heard was that the land was transferred to the Government by the McHenry family. This has been denied. It has been said on good authority that the fort received its name from Secretary of War James McHenry, who served under President Washington in 1796 and 1797. The land was confiscated by the Government at the time of the Revolution from a British company that purposed the establishment of a town on the site. It was added to at various times until it now comprises 34 acres.

A Real Surprise

The "surprise" of Monday evening, July 8th, given by the young people of the community to Miss Marguerite Holland, of Secretary, Md., who has been visiting Mrs. Newton at the parsonage of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Westover, was of a very choice brand. Complete in "the shock" it gave Miss Holland and in the general good time it afforded all concerned, little change could have been made that would have worked any real improvement.

In the future anyone planning "a surprise" should consult those concerned in this one for points. For once even the ladies kept a secret and so the real purpose of the gathering was fulfilled to a "surprising" degree of perfection.

Those present from Westover were: Mrs. William Long, Mr. and Mrs. F. D. Layfield, Misses Dorothy Bissel, Mollie Miller, Margaret and Francis Ritzel, Effie and Pauline Tobey, Mary Long and May Handy and Messrs. Nolan Ross, John Tobey, Mark Miles, Sherwood Cox and Russell Hayman. From Revell's Neck: Misses Lotie Milligan, Pearl Beauchamp, Nellie Powell and Messrs. William and Oscar McDorman. From Kingston: Miss Mary Wilson and Mr. Henry Wilson.

At a reasonable hour, and after refreshments, the merry company departed wishing Miss Holland "many happy returns of the day," for it was the anniversary of her birth. (Fill the blank with exceeding care.)

—When young oysters first appear they are called "spat" and are no larger than a pinhead. At the age of one year they are known as "brood" and a bushel measure will hold about 6,400 of them. When they come to three years old they are designated as "ware," and the 6,400 of them will then fill three one bushel measures. They are not ready for market until they are four years old and then they have arrived to a dignity of proportion that if the bushel of broods has not lost any of its members it will demand nearly seven of such measures to carry them to the stalls.—Brown-ing's Magazine.

—Lots of people spend half their lives overdoing things, and the other half doing them over.

or a 'service' of some kind—anyhow, it must have been in Latin," violently, "for such gibberish, I never heard and—"

The boy rose. "People who can't read and write are low and ignorant!" "Eh? What's come over you?" "My father was a gentleman." "Your father!—yes—"

"And a Seigneur!" "A Seigneur truly!" "And I mean to be one!" said the boy suddenly, closing his fists.

"Oh, oh! So that's it?" derisively. "You! A Seigneur? Whose mother—"

"Who could teach me?" Determined, but with a trace of color on his brown cheek, the boy looked down.

"Who?" The man began to recover from his surprise. "That's not so easy to tell. But if you must know—" well, there's Gabriel Gabarie, for one, a poet of the people. He might do it—although there's talk of cutting off his head—"

"What for?" "For knowing how to write." The lad reached for his hat.

"Where are you going?" "To the poet's." "At this late hour! You are in a hurry!"

"If what you say is true, there's no time to lose." "Well, if you find him writing verses about liberty and equality, don't interrupt him, or you'll lose your head," shouted the man.

But when the sound of the boy's footsteps had ceased, Sanchez's expression changed; more bent, more worn, he got up and walked slowly to and fro. "A fine Seigneur!" The moldering walls seemed to echo the words. "A fine Seigneur!" he muttered, and again sat brooding by the fire.

In the gathering dusk the lad strode briskly on. A squirrel barked to the right; he did not look around. A partridge drummed to the left; usually alert to wood sound or life, tonight he did not heed it. But, fairly out of the forest and making his way with the same air of resolution across the sands toward the lowland beyond, his attention, on a sudden, became forcibly diverted. He had but half completed the distance from the place where he had left the wood to the objective point in the curvature of the shore, when to the left through the gloom, a great vehicle, drawn by six horses, could be seen rapidly approaching. From the imposing equipage gleamed many lamps; the moon, which ere this had begun to assert its place in the heavens, made bright the shining harness and shone on the polished surface of the golden car. Wondering, the boy paused.

"What is that?" The person addressed, a fisherman belated, bending to the burden on his shoulders, stopped, and, breathing hard, looked around and watched the approaching vehicle intently.

"The governor's carriage!" he said. "Haven't you ever heard of the governor's carriage?"

"No." "That's because he hasn't used it lately; but in her ladyship's day—"

"Her ladyship?" "The governor's lady—he bought it for her. But she soon got tired of it—perhaps didn't like the way the people looked at her!" roughly. "Mon dieu! perhaps they did scowl a little—for it didn't please them, I can tell you!—the sight of all that gold squeezed from the taxes!"

"Where is he going now?" "Where himself—he never goes far from the Mount. But the Lady Elise, his daughter—some one in the village was saying she was going to Paris—"

"Paris!" The lad repeated the word quickly. "What for?"

"What do all the great lords and nobles send their children there for? To get educated—married, and—to learn the tricks of the court! Bah!" With a coarse laugh the man turned; stooping beneath his load, he moved grumblingly on.

The boy, however, did not stir; as in a dream he looked first at the Mount, a dark triangle against the sky, then at the carriage. Nearer the latter drew, was about to dash by, when suddenly the driver, on his high seat, uttered an exclamation and at the same time tugged hard at the reins. The vehicle took a quick turn, lurched dangerously in its top-heavy pomp, and almost upsetting, came to a standstill nearly opposite the boy.

"Careless dog!" a shrill voice screamed from the inside. "What are you doing?"

"The lises, your Excellency!" The driver's voice was thick; as he spoke he swayed uncertainly.

"Lises—quicksands—" "There, your Excellency," indicating a gleaming place right in their path; a small bright spot that looked as if it might have been polished, while elsewhere on the surrounding sands tiny rippling parallels caressed the eye with streaks of black and silver.

"I saw it in time!" "In time!" angrily. "Imbecile! Didn't you know it was there?"

"Of course, your Excellency! Only I had misjudged a little, and—" The man's manner showed he was frightened.

"Falsehoods! You have been drinking! Don't answer. You shall hear of this later. Drive around the spot."

"Yes, your Excellency," was the now sober and subdued answer.

Ere he obeyed, however, the carriage door, from which the governor had been leaning, swung open.

"Wait!" he called out impatiently, and tried to close it, but the catch—probably from long disuse—would not hold, and, before the liveried servant perched on the lofty carriage behind had fully perceived the fact and had recovered himself sufficiently to think of his duties, the boy on the beach had sprung forward.

"Slam it!" commanded an irate voice.

The lad complied, and as he did so, peered eagerly into the capacious depths of the vehicle.

"The boy with the fish!" exclaimed at the same time a girlish treble within.

"Eh?" my lord turned sharply. "An impudent lad who stopped the Lady Elise!" exclaimed the fat man—surely Beppo—on the front seat.

"Stopped the Lady Elise!" The governor repeated the words slowly; an ominous pause was followed by an abrupt movement on the part of the child.

"He did not stop me; it was I who nearly ran over him, and it was my fault. Beppo does not tell the truth—he's a wicked man!—and I'm glad I'm not going to see him any more! And the boy wasn't impudent; at least until Beppo offered to strike him, and then, Beppo didn't! Beppo," derisively, "was afraid!"

"My lady," Beppo's voice was soft and unctious, "construes forbearance for fear."

"Step nearer, boy!" Partly blinded by the lamps, the lad obeyed; was cognizant of a piercing scrutiny; two hard, steely eyes that seemed to read his inmost thoughts; a face, indistinguishable but compelling; beyond, something white—a girl's dress—that moved and fluttered!

"Who is he?" "A poor boy who lives in the woods, papa!"

But Beppo leaned forward and whispered, his words too low for the lad to catch. Whatever his information, the governor started; the questioning glance on an instant brightened, and his head was thrust forward close to the boy's. A chill seemed to pass over the lad, yet he did not quail.

"Good-by, boy!" said the child, and, leaning from the window, smiled down at him.

He tried to answer, when a hand pulled her in somewhat over-suddenly. "Drive on!" Again the shrill tones cut the air. "Drive on, I tell you! Diab! What are you standing here for!"

A whip lashed the air and the horses leaped forward. The back wheels of the vehicle almost struck the lad, but, motionless, he continued staring after it. Farther it drew away, and, as he remained thus he discerned, or fancied he discerned, a girl's face at the back—a ribbon that waved for a moment in the moonlight, and then was gone.

Eight years elapsed before next he saw her.

CHAPTER IV.

A Dance on the Beach. The great vernal equinox of April 178—, was the cause of certain unusual movements of the tide, which made old mariners and coast-fishermen shake their heads and gaze seaward, but of all reckoning. At times, after a tempest, on this strange coast, the waters would rise in a manner and at an hour out of the ordinary, and then among the dwellers on the shore, there were those who prognosticated dire unhappiness, telling how the sea had once devoured two villages overnight, and how, beneath the sands, were homes intact, with the people yet in their beds.

Concerned with a disordered social system and men in and out of dungeons, the governor had little time and less inclination to note the caprices of the tide or the vagaries of the strand. The people! The menacing and mercurial ebb and flow of their moods! The maintenance of autocratic power on the land, and, a more difficult task, on the sea—these

On the beach, lighted by torches, a dainty minuet was proceeding gaily, when through the throng of onlookers, a young man with dark head set on a frame tall and powerful, worked his way carefully to a point where he was afforded at least a restricted view of the animated spectacle. Absorbed each in his or her way in the scene before them, no one noticed him, and, with hat drawn over his brow, and standing in the shadow of the towering head-dresses of several peasant women, he seemed content to attract as little attention to himself as possible. His look, at first quick and alert, that of a man taking stock of his surroundings, suddenly became intent and piercing, as, passing in survey over the lowly spectators to the glittering company, it centered itself on the young mistress of festivities.

In costume white and shining, the Lady Elise moved through the graceful numbers, her slender supple figure now poised, now swaying, from head to foot responsive to the rhythm of that "pastime of little steps." Her lips, too, were busy, but such was the witchery of her motion—all fire and life!—the silk-stockinged cavaliers whom she thus regaled with wit, mockery, or jest, could for the most part, respond only with admiring glances or weakly protesting words.

"That pretty fellow, her partner," with a contemptuous accent on the adjective, "is the Marquis de Beauvillers, a kinsman of the king!" said one of the women in the throng.

"Ma foi! They're well matched. A dancing doll for a popinjay!"

The young man behind the head-dresses, now nodding viciously, moved nearer the front. Dressed in the rough though not picturesque fashion of the northern fishermen, a touch of color in his apparel lent to his bearing a note of romance the bold expression of his swarthy face did not belie. For a few moments he watched the girl; the changing eyes and lips, shadowed by hair that shone and flashed like bright burnished gold; then catching her gaze, the black eyes gleamed. An instant their eyes lingered; hers started, puzzled.

"Where have I seen him?" My lady, in turning, paused to swing over her shoulders a glance.

"Whom?" asked her companion in the dance—a fair, handsome nobleman of slim figure and elegant bearing.

"That's just what I can't tell you," she answered, sweeping a courtesy that fitted the rhythm of the music. "Only a face I should remember!"

"Should?" The marquis' look followed hers.

But the subject of their conversation, as if divining the trend of their talk, had drawn back.

"Oh, he is gone now," she answered.

"Must be very dangerous!"

"For a few days, perhaps; later, not at all, when the petites tides are the rule, and can be depended on. Then are the sands, except for one or two places very well-known, as safe as your gardens at Versailles. But remain, and you shall see."

Which they did—finding the place to their liking—or their hostess; for the governor, who cared not for guests, but must needs entertain them for reasons of state, left them as much as might be to his daughter. She, brimming with the ardor and effervescence of eighteen years, accepted these responsibilities gladly; pending that period she had referred to, turned the monks' great refectory into a ball-room, and then, when the gales had swept away, proposed the sands themselves as a scene for diversion both for her guests and the people. This, despite the demur of his Excellency, her father.

"Is it wise," he had asked, "to court the attention of the people?" "Oh, I am not afraid," she had answered. "And they are going to dance, too!"

"They!" He frowned. "Why not? It is the queen's own idea. Let the people dance, she has said, and they will keep out of mischief. Besides," with a prouder poise of the bright head, "why shouldn't they see, and—like me?"

"They like nothing except themselves, and," dryly, "to attempt to evade their just obligations."

"Can you blame them?" She made a light gesture. "Obligations, mon pere, are so tiresome!"

"Well, well," hastily, "have your own way." Although he spoke rather shortly, on the whole he was not displeased with his daughter; her betrothal with the Marquis de Beauvillers, a nobleman of large estates, arranged while she was yet a child!—promised a brilliant marriage and in a measure offered to his Excellency some compensation for that old and long-cherished disappointment—the birth of a girl when his ambition had looked so strongly for an heir to his name as well as to his estate.

And so my lady and her guests danced and made merry on the sands below, and the people came out from the mainland, or down from the houses in the town at the base of the rock, to watch. A varied assemblage of gaunt-looking men and bent, low-browed women, for the most part they stood sullen and silent; though exchanging meaning glances now and then as if to say: "Do you note all this ostentation—all this glitter and display? Yes; and some day—"

Up on brooding brows, in deep-set eyes, on furrowed faces a question and an answer seemed to gleam and pass. Endowed with natural optimism and a vivacity somewhat heedless, my lady appeared unconscious of all this latent enmity until an unlooked-for incident, justifying in a measure the governor's demur, broke in upon the evening's festivities and claimed her attention.

On the beach, lighted by torches, a dainty minuet was proceeding gaily, when through the throng of onlookers, a young man with dark head set on a frame tall and powerful, worked his way carefully to a point where he was afforded at least a restricted view of the animated spectacle. Absorbed each in his or her way in the scene before them, no one noticed him, and, with hat drawn over his brow, and standing in the shadow of the towering head-dresses of several peasant women, he seemed content to attract as little attention to himself as possible. "Ma foi! They're well matched. A dancing doll for a popinjay!"

The young man behind the head-dresses, now nodding viciously, moved nearer the front. Dressed in the rough though not picturesque fashion of the northern fishermen, a touch of color in his apparel lent to his bearing a note of romance the bold expression of his swarthy face did not belie. For a few moments he watched the girl; the changing eyes and lips, shadowed by hair that shone and flashed like bright burnished gold; then catching her gaze, the black eyes gleamed. An instant their eyes lingered; hers started, puzzled.

"Where have I seen him?" My lady, in turning, paused to swing over her shoulders a glance.

"Whom?" asked her companion in the dance—a fair, handsome nobleman of slim figure and elegant bearing.

"That's just what I can't tell you," she answered, sweeping a courtesy that fitted the rhythm of the music. "Only a face I should remember!"

"Should?" The marquis' look followed hers.

But the subject of their conversation, as if divining the trend of their talk, had drawn back.

"Oh, he is gone now," she answered.

"A malcontent, perhaps! One meet's them nowadays."

"No, no! He did not look—" "Some poor fellow, then, your beauty has entrapped?" he insinuated.

"Humble admirer!" "Then I would remember him!" she laughed as the dance came to an end. Now in a tented pavilion, servants, richly garbed in festive costume, passed among the guests, circulating trays, bright with golden dishes and goblets, stamped with the ancient insignia of the Mount, and once the property of the affluent monks, early rulers of the place. Other attendants followed, bearing light delicates, confections and marvelous frosted towers and structures from the castle kitchen.

"The patron saint in sugar!" Merry exclamations greeted these examples of skill and cunning. "Are we to devour the saint?"

"Ah, no; he is only to look at!" "But the Mount in cake—?" "You may cut into that—though beware!—not so deep as the dungeons!"

"A piece of the cloister!" "A bit of the abbey!" "And you, Elise?"

The girl reached gaily. "A little of the froth of the sea!"

Meanwhile, not far distant, a barrel

"Then I Would Remember Him," She Laughed.

had been broached and wine was being circulated among the people. There, master of ceremonies, Beppo dispensed advice with the beverage, his grumbling talk heard above the light laughter and chatter of the lords and ladies.

"Drink to his Excellency!" As he spoke, the governor's man, from the elevated stand upon which he stood, gazed arrogantly around him. "Clods! Sponges that sop without a word of thanks! Who only think of your stomachs! Drink to the governor, I say!"

"To the governor!" exclaimed a few, but it might have been noticed they were men from the town, directly beneath the shadow of his Excellency's castle, and now close within reach of the fat factotum's arm.

"Once more! Had I the ordering of wine, the barrels would all be empty ones, but her ladyship would be generous, and—"

Beppo broke suddenly off, his wandering glance, on a sudden, arrested. "Hein!" he exclaimed, with eyes protruding.

A moment he stammered a few words of surprise and incredulity, the while he continued to search eagerly—but now in vain. The object of his startled attention, illumined, for an instant, on the outskirts of the throng, by the glare of a torch, was no more to be described. As questioning the reality of a fleeting impression, his gaze fixed itself again near the edge of flickering lights; shifted uncertainly to the pavilion where servants from the Mount hurried to and fro; then back to the people around him. His jaw which had dropped grew suddenly firm.

"Clear a space for the dance!" he called out in tones impatient, excited. "It's her ladyship's command—so see you step blithely! And you fellows there, with the tambourin and haut-bois, come forward!"

Two men, clad in sheepskin and carrying rude instruments, obediently advanced, and at once, in marked contrast to the recent tinkling measures of the orchestra, a wild, half-barbaric concord rang out.

But the governor's man, having thus far executed the orders he had received, did not linger to see whether or not his own injunction, "to step blithely," was observed; some concern, remote from galliardie, gavotte or bourree of the people, caused him hastily to dismount from his stand and make his way from the throng. As he started at a rapid pace across the sands, his eyes, now shining with anticipation, looked back.

"What could have brought him here? Him!" he repeated. "Ah, my fine fellow, this should prove a lucky stroke for me!" And quickening his step, until he almost ran, Beppo hurried toward the tower gate of the Mount.

The Right Kind of Hustler.

There is a good story concerning a certain trip of inspection when Louis Hill and a party of officials were taking a peek at the station agents somewhere along the line in Minnesota. At a station we may call Oscarville an agent, perhaps forewarned, was observed frantically moving trucks and cleaning up.

"There's a hustler for you," said one of the party.

"Humph," said Hill.

At another station the agent met them smilingly, smoking a good cigar and clad in his best clothes. He was frankly idling, yet nothing was asked

The County Levy

The County Commissioners have a piece of work to perform each year that requires good management and business judgment. Providing for the county's expenses is not a simple matter, as those who criticize would soon discover were they in a similar official position. To eliminate unnecessary expenses and keep the tax rate within due limits, is no small problem.

The levy, of which we gave a brief synopsis last week, is published in full on our second page. A perusal of this will show the disposition of each item of public expense. The taxable basis of county is $7,651,575, which is nothing like so large as that of some of the other counties on the Shore. To provide for incidental expenses and general appropriations to the amount of $88,871.85 necessitates a tax rate of $1.07. Adding the State rate of 23¢, the total rate is $1.30.

In scrutinizing the items of expense, it is impossible to see how any could have been omitted or how the Commissioners could have avoided in the general appropriations any of the amounts named. Elections have to be held and the new primary law has more than doubled the expense. The public schools have to be maintained and the law so circumscribes the School and County Commissioners as to demand a much larger sum than ever before, especially as some former sources of revenue have been greatly reduced. So with the roads, bridges, almshouse, courts, jail, hospitals, redemption of bonds, etc. So far as the public schools are concerned, the Commissioners were asked for $30,000 by the School Board, but they felt that $27,000 was all they could see the way clear to provide.

Those who know the County Commissioners, their clerk and his assistant and have taken the pains to visit their office whilst the levy was being prepared, can not fail to have seen with what patience and care every item of the levy was examined or to have observed their endeavor to permit no part of the taxable basis to be lost sight of. The county officials have undoubtedly done the best with the levy that was possible and the county is to be congratulated that it has a board whose members have exhibited a conscientious appreciation of duty in the working out of a difficult problem.

The Call For The New Party

The summons to the convention to be held at Chicago next month for the formal launching of the "National Progressive Movement" is, in substance, addressed to those voters who have no faith in or use for, either of the two leading old parties, and presumably for none of the existing minor parties, either. For all such the new party—which with the National Prohibition party meeting at Atlantic City this week, becomes the fifth rather than the third, and may be sixth or seventh before the fifth of August—offers a haven, without regard to conflicting views as to tariff schedules, trust regulation, immigration problems, currency reform, or the usual incidents of party policy as set forth in the ordinary platform. There is no monopoly of political action, and the new party is fully entitled, under the law, to its own. But one of its planks is borrowed from the tablets of Mt. Sinai and reads: "Thou shalt not steal." Obviously a party subscribing to that commandment as a rule of politics, and asserting that nothing good can come out of the Nazareth of existing parties, cannot consistently "borrow" Republican electors, and utilize the Republican name and organization, wherever it chooses, to serve its ends. It must be a new party, and stand on its merits as such.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

The Political Outlook

Just now the national political outlook is decidedly Democratic. An election for President at this time would result in an overwhelming triumph for the Democratic party. The Republican party would hardly be able to carry a State for President Taft, saving Vermont, and even there Republicanism would be terribly shaken.

Of course it is not expected that this situation will continue unchanged until election day. The Republican backbone, at present badly fractured, may be braced up to a fighting posture. Party lines will become more tautly drawn. But there is not, at present, the remotest probability that the Republican organization will be able to get into a position that will enable it to make a hopeful fight.

Even without the enormous accessions that have been made by the Democratic party, it would be reasonably certain of victory this year. The Republican party is hopelessly divided. The Democratic party is united as it has not been since its successful campaign of 1892. The Roosevelt candidacy will draw nothing from it, but will kill the regular Republican party organization.

And even should some miracle come to pass by which the Republican fight would be patched up and the factions united in support of President Taft, it would not affect the prospects of Democratic victory.

This is a Democratic year, and a Democratic President seems sure to occupy the White House for four years from March 4th, 1913.—Wilmington Every Evening.

The Real Third Party

In the national Prohibition party in session at Atlantic City the country has the real third party. This party has undeviatingly held aloft the banner of the prohibition of the liquor traffic in all its branches for many years and its results have been seen in hard-fought state campaigns. Therefore, this party is not disposed to see another party come into the field with different objects and usurp the title of third party and a party of progress.

The national Prohibition party is composed of men whose sincerity and whose devotion to the ends of humanity as they see them may not be controverted. The definite and clear-cut stand of the Prohibitionists makes it possible to see exactly where they line up. They make no compromise and resort to no round-about methods. They simply say they want the abolition of the liquor traffic and mean to get it. Nor will it do to disparage them because of their failure to achieve much in the national field. The growth of sentiment for the cause may be credited quite largely to its continued advocacy by this party.

Therefore, as the third party that has long held that claim, the Prohibitionists in their convention will receive the respectful attention of all whose view of the national field is hospitable to all factors that enter into the good of society.—Baltimore American.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address, F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio. Sold by Druggists, 75 cents. Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

Single Six-Year Term

The nominating conventions being over, and Congress being free to take up its business again, it is devoutly to be hoped that the pending resolution for an amendment to the Constitution limiting the president to a single six-year term will be vigorously pushed to a vote in each house. The judiciary committees have emphatically indorsed the proposition, and sane, mature, intelligent sentiment all over the country earnestly favors it.

The notion of some erratic politicians that the proposed amendment is directed against "one man" is baseless and foolish. It is directed against serious evils and abuses, against insincere "politics" in the White House, against dangerous temptations and hysterical crazes that are so fatal to democracies.

The single six-year term would emancipate the president and increase his power and prestige. He would and could sign or veto bills without thinking of "votes." The pressure of spoilsmen and practical politicians would be largely removed; self-respect, firmness, dignity, conscientious devotion to duty would be immensely strengthened and exalted by the change.—Chicago Record-Herald.

"Demonstrations" at Conventions

When in 1880 Roscoe Conkling seized a flag and marched around the convention hall followed by the 305 Grant delegates he did a most unfortunate thing for the country. That was the origin of the "demonstration" business which has ever since then interrupted the orderly work of national conventions, split the ears of the groundlings and galleries alike, and disgusted sane and order-loving citizens.

The "demonstration" is now an accepted feature of every national convention. It is wearisome and produces great confusion and "demonstrates" nothing except man's tendency to folly. The scenes in the national convention are not unlike that which took place in the theatre at Ephesus when St. Paul was charged with interfering with the business of the silversmiths. A concourse gathered in the theatre and "some cried one thing and some another; for the assembly was confused."

The purpose of a national convention is for representatives of the party from all the States to gather and consult and deliberate as to the party policies and to select party candidates for President and Vice-President. It is manifest that there can be no deliberation in the midst of a howling mob and the work of the convention must suffer. The "demonstration" is as idiotic as it is tiresome. How it can help a candidate for a lot of leather-lunged lunatics, some of them perhaps not lunatics but hired or brought in for the purpose, to run about the convention hall and scream for an hour, no one can tell.

A way to abolish this nuisance ought to be found. The first remedy might be the reduction of the number of delegates to the number of electors and with no alternates except those to take the place of absent delegates. The convention would then be as large as the Senate and House of Representatives combined, about as large as any deliberative body can be to transact business. And then, if the audiences cannot be made to behave themselves, the size of the audience might be reduced to such proportions that the officers of the convention and the police force could cope with them.—Baltimore Sun.

To Take Scenery to Them

For the benefit of those Europeans who cannot come to the United States to see the natural beauties it boasts this scenery is to be taken to them. It will be shown in the form of moving pictures, now being taken in Yellowstone, Yosemite, Mount Rainer and other national parks of the West.

An English concern has sent representatives over here, and they will return with miles of films depicting the gorgeous coloring of the Grand Canyon in Yellowstone Park, the stately, towering sequoias in Yosemite Valley and the picturesque snow-capped Mount Rainer.

If you are a housewife you cannot reasonably hope to be healthy or beautiful by washing dishes, sweeping and doing housework all day, and crawling in to bed dead tired at night. You must get out into the open air and sunlight. If you do this every day and keep your stomach and bowels in good order by taking Chamberlain's Tablets, when needed, you should become both healthy and beautiful. For sale by all dealers.

C. O. MELVIN, Solicitor.

During June there were 3,209 arrests in Baltimore, according to a report submitted to the Police Board by Sgt. Wallace G. Davis, one of the statisticians at Police Headquarters. During the month there were 27 autoists arrested, 15 of whom were fined. Of those arrested 2,704 were men and the balance women. Two thousand and sixty were white and the others colored. Four hundred and fifty of those arrested could not read or write.

Owing to the electric storm last Wednesday evening there was a very small audience at the Auditorium to greet the Blind Concert Company, of Baltimore, under the management of William C. Sherlock, also a blind man. Those who were present were highly entertained as both the vocal and instrumental music was of a high order. The barytone singing of Mr. Feinstein and the violin solos of Mr. Vogts, both of the Maryland School of the Blind, was well rendered. The humor of the monologist, Prof. W. C. Sherlock, were also very enjoyable.

Master Warfield Dashiell, the 11 year old son of Mr. S. Frank Dashiell, Clerk of the Circuit Court, met with a serious accident on Monday afternoon of last week. The little fellow was riding his wheel and when in front of J. A. Dougherty's livery stable, he tripped over a brick and was thrown under a Standard Oil wagon, the wheels of which grazed him instead of passing over him, inflicting very painful injuries to his arms and neck, but breaking no bones. The accident might have been fatal had it not been for the quickness of the Standard Oil driver in applying his brake, thus checking his team which had started up when the boy fell. Doctors Smith and Wainwright were summoned and dressed the boy's wounds and he is now getting along nicely.

Mrs. E. T. Landon and little daughter, Ruth, of Marion, and Miss Lillian Evans, of Smith's Island, have been guests at the parsonage the past week. —Berlin Advance.

Why the Buick is the Best!
The government invited all the leading manufacturers of cars priced from $900 to $2000 to submit a car in competition to a committee of mechanical experts. The cars were driven to the designated place and the drivers dismissed. The examination was then made with no representative of any of the cars present. Motor for motor, shaft for shaft, bolt for bolt, the cars were compared, tested and appraised by the government experts. One by one cars were eliminated until but one remained. It was THE BUICK. Of the seventeen or eighteen cars submitted THE BUICK alone stood the rigid tests of quality and construction upon which the examination was based. This car was at once turned over to the government for immediate service.

Expectations

By EDUARD K. DROANE

I esteem those boys who are obliged to fight their own way up in the world most fortunate and those brought up to wealth most unfortunate.

I came of a family of the middle class and from childhood was made to understand that I would have to fight my own way in the world. But I was given an education, which is considered and usually is essential to success. At sixteen I was about to accept a position in business when an uncle of mine suddenly made a fortune by a deal in the stock market. He had the good sense to invest his gains in good first mortgage bonds and never after risked a cent in speculation.

My uncle was a bachelor sixty years old, and my mother was his favorite sister. He had always shown a partiality for me and proposed to my mother that he should send me to college and make me his heir, for he claimed that he had no desire to marry and if he should marry at his time of life he would wish he had not married. I longed for a college education and for my part was glad to accept my uncle's proposition.

I spent four years at college, my expenses being paid by my uncle. In deed, he gave me an allowance that enabled me to associate with such of my fellow students as were not obliged to earn their living or a part of it while getting their education.

When I was graduated with a fair standing in my class I was one of the all around prominent men of it. I began the study of a profession—at my uncle's expense—and had nearly finished it when I received a telegram that my uncle was very ill. I went to him at once and assumed the direction of his household. His illness was destined to be a protracted one, and there being no one but myself to do anything for him, I assumed charge not only of his domestic but his other affairs.

I spent five years ministering to the old man, living in his house with him and devoting myself exclusively to him. I regretted that my professional studies had been broken into, but since I was heir to a fortune and had what money I needed I did not repine. True, my uncle was very irritable and often tried my patience, but the doctors assured me that he could live only a few years at most, and then, having means at my command, I could make up for lost time, for, be it understood, I was not content to live in idleness and especially desired a career.

My uncle lingered longer than had been expected, and toward the last I found the work of amusing him very trying. I suggested cards, and he was pleased with the idea. He had been a poker player in his time, and by playing with him for a small stake I got through many hours that would otherwise have been a burden. Nevertheless playing penny ante with a broken down old man hour after hour was not to me a pleasing way of spending my time, and when my uncle proposed to raise the stake to 5 cents I acquiesced.

This was a mistake. He was a natural gambler, and it was a knowledge of this fact—a fear that he would lose what he had made in the stock market—that led him to quit "the street." Since then his passion for gambling had lain dormant. It was now excited anew. He kept raising the stake, and I did not dare to oppose him. When he got the value of a chip up to 25 cents I began to be troubled. However, I hoped that by refusing to win I might keep out of trouble, for I realized that to win any considerable amount from him would irritate him, and in his broken condition I feared he might break with me.

One afternoon when he was more fretful than usual I got out the cards and the chips. During the sitting there occurred one of those marvelous runs of luck by which players are enabled to break banks. A jack pot had been growing on the table for some time when I was dealt three queens and drew a fourth. I would have bet a small sum, but since the cards must be shown I feared to irritate my uncle by appearing to favor him. At the showdown he had a full of aces, which gave me the pot.

From that time the devil seemed to be in the cards. Whenever I dealt I gave myself large hands and invariably gave my uncle hands but a little below mine. When I had a straight flush he would have a full; when I had three aces he would have three lower cards. Terrified, I attempted to deal him a hand larger than mine. He caught me in the act.

For some time I had seen by his expression that he suspected I was intentionally dealing to myself large hands and to him hands but little smaller to draw him on. When he caught me trying to deal him a winner he fell back on the pillows behind him and pointed to the door. In vain I endeavored to explain. He continued to point to the door, and I left hoping when he had cooled to renew my efforts to disabuse his mind of his impression. He sent word for me to leave the house and never enter it again.

The next day he changed his will, leaving his fortune to charities, and a further result of the episode was his death a few days later.

I am over thirty years old, have never earned a cent in my life and don't know how to begin to do so.

This comes of waiting for dead men's shoes.

LARGEST Carriage, Wagon and Harness Dealer
In the State of Maryland

New styles for 1912, they are exclusive, no other dealer can get them only through J. T. Taylor, Jr., as I am the general agent for the manufacturers who produce the new styles which other manufacturers copy, and are always one year behind the styles.

I Have in Stock for Your Selection

The lightest surrey made in the U. S. for one horse.
The lightest runabout with 4 styles axles.
The lightest novelty Wrenn buggy with 4 styles axles.
The lightest speed cart on the market.

All of the above goods are bought in car load lots.

My Farm Wagons cannot be equaled for ten dollars ($10.00) more. We don't only guarantee our steel axles, but we guarantee every part of the wagon. Our rims are deeper, our spokes and hubs are larger. Look them over, don't be deceived by paint and putty.

Yes, I keep the price down. I have no one to divide my profit with but my customer. I am selling more buggies, runabouts, wagons, and harness this year than ever before. I have the largest stock you ever saw.

14 Car loads of Buggies and Wagons.
One and one-half car loads of Harness.

My sales last year were over One Hundred Thousand Dollars ($100,000). I'll build you a buggy to order at the same price you pay for the ones you have forced on you by other dealers. You have been paying too much; come see for yourself.

Indian Computation of Time.
Certain of the reservation Indians still cling to the calendar of their ancestors. The Indian method was to compute time by sleeps and moons. A sleep is twenty-four hours, and a moon is a month. There is also a midmoon, where the sun is at 12 o'clock, meridian. The hour is indicated by pointing overhead. When an Indian pointed quarter way up the sky he meant 9 o'clock. When he pointed quarter way down he meant 3 o'clock. Sunrise was the eastern horizon and sunset the western. Night was indicated by holding the hands together, palms downward, stretching out the arms and holding the body and head bent forward. When there was a moon the time was indicated in the same way as was the sun. Were an Indian asked the distance to a certain place or how far he had come he would say so many sleeps or days' travel. A sleep, as describing distance, was about thirty-five miles when walking deliberately, or from fifty to seventy-five miles if going in haste with a messenger.—New York Press.

Human Horns.
In the anatomical museum of the Edinburgh university four horns are preserved which had grown upon human heads. One of these is about seven inches long, as thick as the little finger and crooked in shape. A label attached to it bears this inscription: "This horn was cut by Arthur Temple, surgeon, out of the head of Elizabeth Low, being three inches above the right ear, before witnesses, the 14th of May, 1871. It was a growing seven years. Her age is fifty years." The three other human horns also graced the heads of ladies.
In Sir Robert Sibbald's "History of Fife," a curious book published about the beginning of the eighteenth century, we read: "A person of quality, a lady of great age in this shire, had a horn growing out of her toe and put her from walking. It was cut off by Dr. H., and she was freed of pain and walked."

They May Not Use Blotting Paper.
There are probably few houses, business or otherwise, in England, that do not possess a sheet of blotting paper. It is one of the commonest articles of everyday use. And yet there is at least one calling whose activities are of vital importance to the nation, the members of which are absolutely forbidden to use blotting paper—that of registrar. Registrars are supplied with a special kind of ink, which is permanent and very black. In order that it may be thoroughly effective it must be allowed to dry of its own accord.
India rubber or any other form of eraser is likewise forbidden. If the registrar makes a slip of the pen that slip must stand. If he writes a word wrongly he must draw a line through it and write the correction above. Even smudges and blots must be left uneraser.—London Answers.

Browning's Vision and Memory.
Browning had the faculties of vision and memory developed to abnormal degree. Grant Duff records a conversation with Sir Laurence Alma-Tadema, who "gave me a curious account of Browning's sight, maintaining that with one eye he could read the number of a picture at the end of a long gallery, while with the other (sic) without artificial assistance he could write an ode of Horace on a piece of paper the size of a threepenny bit."
Another diarist, Mrs. Andrew Crosse, heard Browning in the course of a discussion on Byron quote the whole of the "Vision of Judgment" after remarking, "I have not seen the poem for forty years, but this is graven on my memory."—London Chronicle.

Costly Curds.
The Empress Catherine, noticing that the beautiful Mile. Potocka, who had lately come to court, had no pearls, immediately commanded a fancy dress ball, to which the girl was bidden to come as a milkmaid. Then while Mile. Potocka was dancing the empress slipped a superb necklace of pearls into the pail she carried and at her exclamation of wonder said, "It is only the milk which has curdled."

No Head For Figures.
"Is every hair in your head numbered, grandpa?"
"Yes, my child."
"Well, grandpa," said the little fellow as he contemplated the great bald spot, "you haven't got much of a head for figures."—Exchange.

Too Smooth.
"I won't play poker with that fellow any more. He's entirely too smooth. He bobbed up last night with four aces."
"What's wrong about that?"
"I had dealt him four queens."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

His Changed Fortune.
"Wow! There went Smithkins in his new six. When I knew him a few years ago he had a junk shop."
"He still has, only he moved it to a fashionable street, kept the same stock and labeled it 'Antiques.'"—Leslie's Weekly.

A Real Friend.
"Brown volunteered to lend me some money."
"Did you take it?"
"No. That sort of friendship is too good to lose."—Detroit Free Press.

Her Mistake.
Wife—I really believe you married me simply because I have money. Hub—You're wrong. I married you because I thought you'd let me have some of it.

Little things console us, because little things afflict us.—Pascal.

A LESSON FROM BASEBALL

Always Save Something For the Time When the Pinch Comes.

In his book, "Pitching In a Pinch," Christy Mathewson has some good advice to offer to boys who would like to be successful pitchers, and it is not hard to read in his words a lesson of life as well.

"Some pitchers," says the veteran, "will put all they have on each ball. That is foolish for two reasons. In the first place, it exhausts the man physically, and when the pinch comes he hasn't the strength to last it out."

The pinch, it may be here interpolated, is what pitchers call the inning that comes in most ball games, on which hangs victory or defeat. And when the pinch comes it is a case of the batter's nerve against the pitcher's. "But, second and more important, it shows the batters everything that he has, which is senseless. A man should always hold something in reserve, a surprise to spring when things get tight. If a man has displayed his whole assortment to the batters in the early part of the game and has used all his speed and his fastest breaking curve, when the crisis comes he has nothing to fall back on."

"Like all youngsters," continues Mr. Mathewson reminiscently, "I was eager to make a record during my first year in the big league, and in one of the first games I pitched against Cincinnati I made the mistake of putting all that I had on every ball."

"We were playing at the Polo grounds and the Glants had the visitors beaten, 2 to 0, going into the last inning. I had been burning them over, trying to strike out every batter and hadn't held anything in reserve. The first man to bat in the ninth got a single, the next a two bagger, and by the time they had stopped hitting me we had lost the game 4 to 2."

"I was very much down in the mouth over the defeat after I had the game practically won, and George Davis, then manager of the Glants, noticed it. 'Never mind, Matty,' he said; 'it was worth it. The game ought to teach you not to pitch your head off when you don't need to.'"

"It did," concludes Mr. Mathewson. "I have never forgotten that lesson."

JAMMED ON AN ICEBERG.

One of the Most Curious Arctic Experiences on Record.

"This is the most remarkable escape from imminent danger in the whole annals of arctic adventure," said Sir Clements Markham, the explorer, in describing a thrilling incident to illustrate a lecture on icebergs before the Royal Societies club.

"It concerned," he said, "their steam tender, the Intrepid, commanded by Lieutenant J. B. Caton. A vast floe drove her against a berg with a frightful crash. Destruction seemed certain when the little vessel was seen to rise to the pressure. She was forced forty feet up the side of the iceberg, masses of ice from the floating floe running ten feet above the hullwork, then the piled up mass from the deck sank down, leaving the ship suspended on the side of the berg, her only supports to keep her stationary in this dangerous position being two small wedge pieces, one at the stern post and the other at the bow. She was in imminent danger of falling over on her broadside from that height."

"The boats had been got out, but they were smashed to pieces by the ice. Three times the ice floe pressed against the berg, and with the boats gone, the loss of the ship would have entailed that of all on board. Suddenly the pressure eased off, and the Intrepid was launched into the sea from her lofty position without injury. Lieutenant Caton and others had walked under her keel while she was thus suspended on the side of the iceberg."—London Chronicle.

He Was Very Economical.

James Tyson, the richest man Australia ever produced, although lord of £5,000,000, remained a simple bushman to his last day. A shabby suit of cheap ready made clothes was his only wear, and a boot lace formed the guard of a silver watch which, as a young man, he had bought for a sovereign. He ate the same fare as his own laborers, and it was his boast that he had never entered a theater or tasted intoxicants of any kind; that he had never used soap—he preferred sand—nor worn a white shirt or a glove.

Antiquity of Chairs.

Chairs were in use in Egypt so long ago as 3399 B. C. The Chinese employed them from about 1300 B. C. In India they were used and are mentioned as dating from 1100 B. C. House chairs with backs were in use in India A. D. 300. They are known to have been employed in Rome so early as A. D. 70, being mentioned by Pliny at that date. Chairs with foot rests were used in Rome A. D. 150.

A Paragon of Patience.

"He's the most patient man I ever knew."
"That so?"
"Yes; he can even herd a bunch of people together to have a group picture taken without losing his temper."—Detroit Free Press.

Slow.

He—Why do you call Mrs. Flash slow? She—Why, it has taken her forty-five years to reach the age of thirty.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Becoming Diffidence.

"Weren't you shy when the judge asked you your age in court?"
"Yes; I was about ten years shy, my dear."—Life.

What Cholera Costs

If statistics were prepared showing the loss annually caused by the death of hogs and poultry by cholera, the results would be appalling. In the United States alone over a million of the disease has been found in Cal-Sino powder. It is not only a cure but a sure preventive, illustrating the adage that an ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure. Cal-Sino wards off cholera and other bowel ailments and keeps swine or fowl in the pink of condition. The preparation is a prescription of one of the foremost veterinarians of the age, and the results from its use have been amazingly satisfactory. Hundreds of voluntary testimonials bear evidence to this fact. Cal-Sino is put up in two forms, one for poultry and one for hogs. The manufacturers, the Royal Distributing Co., Baltimore, Md., will send to live stock owners free on request, a copy of their 60 page, illustrated book, "How To Tell," showing how to know and how to cure diseases in horses, cattle, sheep, hogs and poultry. It contains much valuable information.

Immigration to Southern States

Baron H. D. W. Hooft, of Rotterdam, Holland, is in Washington conferring with Senator Duncan U. Fletcher and Dr. C. J. Owens, president and managing director of the Southern Commercial Congress, concerning immigration of Dutch and Belgian farmers to the Southern States.
The Baron, who belongs to one of the most ancient and wealthy noble families of Holland, is organizing the European Mortgage Company, of Rotterdam, to finance Dutch and Belgian farmers who wish to take up Southern farm lands. Already some of these immigrants have settled in Florida, and more are to be sent soon from Amsterdam and Rotterdam to other Southern states.
"The South should advertise its immense opportunities in Europe, like Canada and some of the Western States are doing," declared the Baron. He says the South offers to the European farmer, who wishes to emigrate, the best chance in the world to become independent. He is making it part of his emigration propaganda in Holland and Belgium to tell his countrymen of the wonderful possibilities for European settlers in the Southern States.

"Some two years ago," said the Baron, "I was in Amsterdam in the Amstel Hotel and met an American who told me of the opportunities in the South. My interest was aroused and after a trip to Florida two years ago I interested many friends in the emigration project. We have sent some farmers to Florida where they are doing well, and will soon send others. I have succeeded in making Florida and other Southern States well-known in Holland. When I return to Holland I will make a report to the Dutch Minister of Foreign Affairs on the possibilities existing for our immigrants in this section of the United States, and of the great work the Southern Commercial Congress is doing in developing the Southern States."

Defends Chicago Women

Chicago women, after being frowned upon for a generation by the women of other cities as being the possessors of the largest feet, finally have been placed in their true light. Instead of having largest feet they are possessed of exactly the opposite, according to Dr. Ignac J. Reis, in attendance at the National Chiropractic Convention at Chicago.
"The women of Chicago have been libeled and slandered for years in that they have been given notoriety as having the largest feet," said Dr. Reis. "As a matter of fact, their shoes are smaller than those worn by the women of Paris, London, New York, Berlin or Naples. Statistics gathered by shoe dealers and manufacturers, fortified by the observations of chiropractors prove this."
"Thousands of women in Chicago between the ages of 30 and 35 can wear a one and one-half shoe. The average size shoe worn by women here is three and a quarter, in New York four and in Paris three and three-quarters, in London and Berlin four and in Naples four and one-quarter."

For soreness of the muscles, whether induced by violent exercise or injury, there is nothing better than Chamberlain's Liniment. This liniment also relieves rheumatic pains. For sale by all dealers.

How to Climb a Snow-Capped Mountain

Full directions regarding the best method of climbing Mount Rainier, which is surrounded by one of the largest glacial systems in the United States radiating from any single peak, are given in circular entitled "General Information Regarding Mount Rainier National Park," just issued by the Department of the Interior.

Mount Rainier National Park is situated in western Washington about 51.1 miles southeast of the city of Tacoma. It has an area of 207,360 acres and includes Mount Rainier and all its approaches. Surrounding the mountain are beautiful forests of fir and cedar and in the natural parks below the snow line are luxuriant fields of wild flowers of all colors and descriptions. The park is under the control and supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, who is represented in the actual administration of the park by the superintendent, assisted by a number of park rangers who patrol the reservation.

Between and below the glaciers are numerous open slopes and valleys which are covered with luxuriant growths of grasses, sedge, and flowering plants. These parks are diversified by growths of alpine fir and hemlock and by many small lakes and running streams. They present a pleasing contrast to the snow fields and rugged peaks by which they are surrounded, and are greatly admired by visitors. Paradise Valley is the most frequented of the many parks. The Government road running through this park and for some distance beyond the Camp of the Clouds makes it easily accessible for tourists. Near Paradise Valley and at the headwaters of Tahoma Fork is Indian Henry's Hunting Ground, so named from the circumstance that it was formerly the favorite resort of a small band of Klickitat Indians. Grand Park, between the main and west forks of White River, is one of the largest and most beautiful of these open tracts. At the altitude of 6,000 feet it is an almost level grassy plateau, the greater part of which is entirely without timber. Moraine Park, between the Sluiskin Range and the Carbon Glacier, is a small and very attractive mountain valley.

Students Repudiate Hell

By unanimous action, on Monday of last week, the International Bible Students' Association, in session at Washington, D. C., adopted a resolution unreservedly repudiating as thoroughly unscriptural the teaching of a place, state or condition of "hell fire and brimstone" for the torment of the wicked.

At the same time the 4,000 delegates in the convention resolved that the vast majority of ministers of all Protestant denominations of the United States have privately repudiated the hell fire theory, but for supposedly good reasons had hesitated fully to inform their congregations. It was the sense of the convention that on this account thousands, and perhaps tens of thousands, were being driven into skepticism or infidelity.

The convention appealed to every minister in the United States to publish in his local newspaper over his signature a statement declaring whether he believed the Bible taught the doctrine of a literal hell fire, and every newspaper editor was requested to invite the ministers of his locality to avail themselves of his newspaper's columns for that purpose.

The hell-fire question was brought up by Brigadier General William P. Hall, United States Army, who requested the association to repudiate the doctrine. There was an animated discussion before the resolution, presented by Dr. L. E. Smith, of Louisville, was adopted.

Teachers Under $50 Unfit

Edward J. Tobin, Cook county, (Ill.) superintendent of schools, declared last week that women were not competent to teach school if they agree to give their services for less than $50 a month. The superintendent made the statement after he had sent notices to teachers that he would cancel certificates where contracts were made for less than this stipulated salary.

"In the school year that ended in June, 1911," said Superintendent Tobin, "many teachers were getting only $35 a month, and in the year previous many of them, according to the records, were being paid $25 and $30."

"I have told every teacher that comes under my jurisdiction that her minimum salary must be $50. The women I am certifying to the school directors as capable are worth that much, or more, and they must get it or they cannot teach in this county. I have told the teachers that I would revoke certificates where the order was not obeyed."

The county superintendent has jurisdiction only outside Chicago.

Mail Carriers Will Fly

This is an age of great discoveries. Progress rides on the air. Soon we may see Uncle Sam's mail carriers flying in all directions, transporting mail. People take a wonderful interest in a discovery that benefits them. That's why Dr. King's New Discovery for Coughs, Colds and other throat and lung diseases is the most popular medicine in America. "It cured me of a dreadful cough," writes Mrs. J. F. Davis, Stickney Corner, Md., "after doctor's treatment and all other remedies had failed." For coughs, colds or any bronchial affection its unequalled. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free at Omar A. Jones' Drug Store.

The Spraying of Tomatoes

The growing of tomatoes for canning purposes seems to be on the increase in many sections of the State. The crop is a profitable one when properly grown and cared for. It does not pay for the trouble of handling when only three or four tons are produced per acre.

The blighting of a large amount of foliage of the plant just before ripening of the fruit is very common and causes severe losses in many patches. This disease is common throughout the State, its rapid development being dependent upon favorable conditions.

As blight may be expected to develop in any patch, precaution should be taken to prevent it, as far as possible. All patches should be sprayed once or twice with Bordeaux Mixture, (4 lbs. Stone Lime, 4 lbs. Copper Sulphate (Blue Vitriol) to 50 gallons water). This is a safe preventive and is a very inexpensive remedy.

It has been shown time and again that this treatment is very beneficial and will prevent tomatoes from being badly attacked by this disease. Spray now. It is too late after the disease appears.

The Maryland Agricultural College and Experiment Station will be glad to conduct some demonstration sprayings for this disease in any part of the county. All persons who would desire to cooperate in the treatment of this crop, should immediately communicate with T. B. Symons, College Park, Md. It is desired to conduct demonstrations in packing of apples, peaches, etc., and in spraying of late potatoes for blight.

Dysentery is always serious and often a dangerous disease, but it can be cured. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy has cured it even when malignant and epidemic. For sale by all dealers.

SCHOOL BOARD HOLDS IMPORTANT SESSION

Scholarships Awarded—Changes of Teachers—Two Schools to Be Closed—New Building

The School Board of Somerset county held two long sessions last week, one on Tuesday afternoon and the other on Wednesday morning. Scholarships were awarded as follows: Maryland Agricultural College, John C. Sterling, of Crisfield, who was on competitive examination; Maryland State Normal School, Misses Iris Stevenson, of Marion Station, Naomi Todd, of Habnab, and Elsie Dorsey, of Tull's Corner; Maryland Institute of Art and Design, 4-year term, Harrington Sterling, of Crisfield; 3-year term, Miss L. Ella Barnes, of Howard county, there being no Somerset applicant.

The scholarship at Western Maryland College, for girls, was not awarded, as the competitive examination showed a tie between Miss Gertrude Flurer and Miss Mildred Powell, both of Princess Anne, they standing highest on the list. Some amicable arrangement is expected to be made by which both these young ladies may be accommodated, after consultation with the President of the College.

The following changes in teachers were made: Principals, confirmed—Loretto, Mrs. Florence Pollitt; Burnettsville, Miss Mary E. Coulbourne; Shelton, Miss Bertie C. Pierson; Tylerton, Miss Ada Phillips; Asbury Graded School, Miss Agnes Laird; Revell's Neck, Miss Minnie Pollitt. The same assistant teachers were appointed, as last year, with one or two exceptions, which will be announced later.

A number of trustees were appointed to fill vacancies caused by resignation.

The schools at Fishing Island and Bethel have been closed for lack of attendance. It was ordered that the Rumble school shall be discontinued, as the one at Jericho is deemed sufficient for that neighborhood. The school at Tull's Corner was also ordered to be closed on account of small attendance, unless the patrons will assist in maintaining it.

The new school building at Marion was ordered to be opened for use in September, but with three teachers only for the present as the attendance does not yet justify use of the fourth room. The Treasurer was ordered to return to the givers the $250 contributed for this school, as the remainder of the $1,000 arranged to be given by the community had not been received.

The President and Secretary were instructed to let out a contract for a new building for Colored School No. 1, District 10, near Eden, to replace the one destroyed by fire two years ago, school having since been conducted in a nearby building.

The School Board absolutely declines to confirm any teacher who does not hold a certificate or whose certificate is expired.

We Agreeable Social Functions

The home of Mrs. C. M. Dashiell, on Eckford avenue, last Tuesday was the scene of two agreeable social functions. In the morning a card party was given in honor of her niece, Miss Beatie Emily Dashiell, of Baltimore. The guests were as follows: Mrs. Robert F. Uer, Mrs. H. L. Brittingham, Mrs. T. Smith, Mrs. H. J. Waters, Mrs. W. Spiva, Mrs. C. C. Waller, Mrs. W. Dashiell, Mrs. William Todd, Mrs. George H. Myers, Mrs. H. P. Dashiell, Mrs. Henry M. Lankford, Mrs. Mark Cooper, Mrs. Wm. C. Brown, Mrs. Walter Brewington, Misses Margaret Atkinson, Cecelia Brattan, Eleanor Brattan, Ellen D. McMaster, Irene Taylor, Ed. Waller, Jane Wilson, Amanda Lankford, Margaret Robertson, Harriet Bishop and Irene Hennig.

In the evening a card party was given in honor of Mrs. Dashiell's niece, Mildred Dashiell, of Baltimore, and one present were: Mr. and Mrs. H. Ruhl, Misses Olga Young, Dorothy Lee, Mary Miles Dashiell, Sara Taylor, Alene Wallop, Emily Dashiell, Mildred Beatty, Elizabeth Beauchamp, Marian Stanford, Olive Dashiell, and Messrs. Charles E. Robinson, Walter H. Hayward Marshall, Robert Brattan, H. L. Brittingham, Francis Bringham, Merton Stevens, Gordon Tull, Mr. Henry Dashiell and Dr. Charles Fisher.

Senator Smith voted for Lorimer. He has no doubt that he had his reasons, as he did when he voted for Lum protection. From his point of view vote is a courageous act. Senator Smith is a man's man, but not a state's man.—Baltimore Sun.

W. F. MCCOONBS WILL MARSHAL CAMPAIGN

With Headquarters in New York Harmony Marks the Democratic Committee Meeting

At the Democratic Committee Meeting Monday of last week in Chicago, William F. McCoombs, of New York, Governor Woodrow Wilson's choice, was elected chairman of the Democratic National Committee, and was empowered to appoint a committee of not fewer than nine members to take active charge of the Democratic presidential nominee's campaign.

Mr. McCoombs also was authorized to select a national treasurer and such other officers as he may see fit, including possibly a vice chairman, and, after consulting with Governor Wilson, to name the location of the headquarters. Mr. McCoombs said he thought the principal headquarters would be in New York.

Joseph E. Davies, of Madison, Wis., was elected secretary of the committee, to succeed Urey Woodson, of Kentucky. John I. Martin, of St. Louis, was re-elected sergeant-at-arms. Mr. McCoombs' selection and the plan to appoint a campaign committee, with Mr. McCoombs as chairman of the subcommittee, were ordered on resolutions offered by Committeeman Robert S. Hudspeth, of New Jersey, as representing the wishes of Governor Wilson. In presenting Mr. McCoombs' name Mr. Hudspeth said:

"The intelligent and sagacious handling of Mr. Wilson's campaign in the last year and a half has demonstrated his wonderful fitness for leadership and shown him to be amply equipped to carry the Democratic party to victory."

The vote for the selection was unanimous and Norman E. Mack, the retiring chairman, yielded the gavel to Mr. McCoombs.

"I cannot hope to achieve success unless I have the entire support of this committee, which I believe I have," said Mr. McCoombs. "I urge all of you during the campaign to consult with me freely."

Committeeman Walter J. Costello, of the District of Columbia, read a letter which he said he received from Speaker Champ Clark just before leaving Washington. The letter said:

"As you are about to start to meet your fellow-committeemen at Chicago, I write this note to wish you a pleasant journey and a safe return. I hope the committee will formulate plans wisely for the success of Wilson and Marshall and organize for the campaign immediately and thoroughly."

The following resolution offered by Senator Thomas P. Gore, who sat in the committee on proxy, was adopted unanimously:

"Be it resolved by the National Democratic Committee that we congratulate the country and the Democracy upon the exceptional prospects of Democratic success in November next. We rejoice that all Democrats everywhere are united and enthusiastic in support of the platform and nominees of the party. We earnestly invite all voters, without reference to previous political faith or affiliation, who are in sympathy with such platform and nominees, to unite permanently or co-operate temporarily with the Democratic party in this supreme struggle for the establishment of justice and right as against favoritism and privilege."

"Resolved, That we gratefully acknowledge our profound appreciation of the courageous, disinterested and patriotic course of many Republicans and Independents, including a number of the most distinguished leaders and editors, in declaring their intention to support the Democrats in the pending presidential contest."

Underwood Glad to Meet Wilson

When Governor Wilson and Representative Oscar Underwood, of Alabama, met at Trenton, N. J., last Tuesday, it was for the first time, the greeting was a hearty one and in a few minutes the two seemed to be fast friends. Mr. Underwood came from Washington to talk over the political situation with the Presidential candidate and they conferred when the Governor entertained the party leader at luncheon at the Trenton Country Club. Mr. Underwood was immensely pleased with his talk to the Governor. He said that after the adjournment of Congress he would be at the "command of his chief," meaning Governor Wilson, and will do everything possible for his election. The genial Southerner said that there was absolutely no doubt as to Democratic success and added: "The other side is going to lose, so you see we have to win."

The Congressman was reminded that it was to be a three-cornered fight, but he evidently did not take very much stock in the Roosevelt ticket, as he said, the Colonel is forcing himself into the fight. As to his own part in the campaign Mr. Underwood said that during the thirty years of his public life he had been taking orders and he did not think he would change this year. He was at Governor Wilson's command.

AVIATOR LATHAM GORED TO DEATH

Escaped Fate in the Air to Die in the Jungles—A Brilliant Career Ended

Hubert Latham, the famous Anglo-French aviator and one of the pioneers of heavier-than-air aviation, was killed by a wild buffalo on June 7th during a hunt in the French Sudan.

Latham's death occurred on the Chari River, near the Bahr Es Salamat, practically in the center of the French Sudan, in the direction of Lake Chad.

The governor general of French equatorial Africa, Martial Henri Merlin, in telegraphing the news to Paris, last Tuesday, to the Minister of the Colonies, says Latham was out with a number of natives in the forest when he shot and wounded a buffalo, which immediately charged him and gored and trampled him to death.

The news of Latham's death has caused sorrow throughout France, where he was a sort of national hero because of his brilliant contribution of French successes in aviation during its earlier and most difficult stages.

The newspapers of Paris pay tribute to him as a valorous young sportsman who dedicated his education and fortune to his country's cause. Latham was for a long time convinced that he was stricken with an incurable malady and it was in order to fight this, according to his friends, that he temporarily abandoned aviation and sought seclusion and health in the wilds of Africa. Latham was a splendid shot and in 1905 went elephant hunting in the Sudan. In 1906 he made a trip from Khartoum to Abyssinia, then passed through British East Africa and visited India and French Indo-China.

On his last and fatal hunting trip he left Bordeaux on December 29 last year for the Congo, taking with him a monoplane and a big game outfit.

Democratic Committeemen Visit Wilson's Mate

Governor Thomas R. Marshall, Democratic candidate for Vice-President, last Tuesday received at the State Capitol 20 members of the Democratic National Committee, who at the invitation of Thomas Taggart, committeeman from Indiana, had stopped in Indianapolis on their way home from the reorganization meeting at Chicago.

Escorted by Democratic marching clubs, the committeemen rode in automobiles from their hotel to the State House, where they were presented to Governor Marshall by Taggart. "We are here representing the National Committee to pay its respects to you, Governor, as the running mate of Woodrow Wilson and the next Vice-President of the United States," said Taggart.

Speeches pledging enthusiastic cooperation during the campaign under the leadership of Governors Wilson and Marshall were made by Robt. S. Hudspeth, of New Jersey; Congressman A. Mitchell Palmer, of Pennsylvania; Martin J. Wade, of Iowa, and Joseph Davis, of Wisconsin, secretary of the committee. Congressman Palmer said:

"In coming to greet you, Governor, the National Committee shows its pride in the ticket and declares its allegiance to the great cause you and Governor Wilson represent. We enter this campaign in fullest confidence that the patriotism of the American people will result in the election in November of Wilson and Marshall."

In response Governor Marshall said he "did not know whether he was 'progressive' or not," and continued:

"There are many kinds of 'progress' nowadays. One believes in taking the tariff off Iowa products and putting it on Indiana products and another supports the opposite policy. I am not that kind of a progressive. But if the term means to believe that the Democratic party should meet changing conditions in protecting the people against the special interests, I am progressive."

Stuart-Humphreys Wedding

Miss Lucy Eugene Humphreys, daughter of Mrs. Eugene W. Humphreys and the late Dr. Humphreys, of Salisbury, was married Tuesday morning to Richard D. Stuart, of the editorial staff of the Baltimore News. The ceremony was performed at St. Peter's Episcopal Church, Salisbury, by the rector, Rev. David Howard. William Calvert Stuart, brother of the groom, was best man. The bride was given in marriage by her brother, Theodore F. Stuart, of Philadelphia. She wore a gown of white embroidered linen with Panama hat. After a trip to Montreal and Quebec Mr. and Mrs. Stuart will be at the Preston Apartments, Baltimore, about September 1.

FACES TWO WOMEN HE HAD MARRIED

Nathan White Arrested for Bigamy and Lodged in Jail for Action of Grand Jury

Nathan White, of Worcester county, was arraigned in the Police Court at Crisfield on Thursday afternoon on the charge of bigamy. White turned pale when confronted by the two infuriated women he had married, one a tall, handsome brunette, the other a petite and pretty blonde. After looking at White with contempt, wife No. 1 and wife No. 2 shook hands and quietly took their seats, side by side.

From the evidence it appeared that White came to Crisfield last fall, where he met Miss Rosa Larimore, of that town. After an ardent courtship of two weeks they were married at the parsonage of Mount Pleasant Church by the pastor, Rev. Louis Randall. A stormy wedded life of seven weeks followed and White, after threatening to whip his wife, deserted her. The next heard of him was in Salisbury, where he was employed and where he passed himself off as a single man under the alias of Harry Carey.

Four weeks ago he met Miss Daisy Niblett, daughter of a well-known farmer of Wicomico county, and laying siege to her heart, carried her off and married her in just two weeks after meeting her. They were married on July 3rd by Rev. George P. Jones, district superintendent of the Wilmington Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. For some reason, unknown to anyone but White, the marriage certificate shows that the young lady's name had been changed from Niblett to Driscoll. On Tuesday wife No. 1, of Crisfield was apprised of the second marriage through an acquaintance at Salisbury and immediately swore out a writ for White's arrest. Sheriff Tull, of Somerset, got in touch with Sheriff Smith, of Wicomico county, who located White Wednesday and brought him to Somerset, where he was turned over to the authorities.

Justice Nelson, before whom White was arraigned, held the prisoner under $1,000 bond for the action of the Grand Jury. Not being able to furnish bond, he was committed to jail at Princess Anne.

White is a young man of pleasing appearance, about medium height, rather thin, with smooth face, blue eyes and dark hair and looks to be about 30 years of age. According to a statement of wife No. 1, White is said to have three other wives living, one in Norfolk, Va.; one in Charleston, S. C., and one in Philadelphia.

Child Dies of Wounds

Bulah West, the nine-year-old daughter of Mr. James West, of near Piney Grove, Worcester county, died at the Peninsula General Hospital, Salisbury, late Tuesday afternoon from gun shot wounds.

The little girl was in the home of her parents with her smaller brothers and sisters and was sweeping the floor when her broom struck a loaded gun, which went off and the load of shot took effect in the child's lower limbs. There was no one at home at the time but little Bulah and the other smaller children and the little victim lay on the floor without medical attention for two hours when her mother returned and found her in a most pitiable condition. Dr. Strong was at once summoned and rushed the child to Salisbury in his automobile and Dr. Dick amputated the injured leg, but the little sufferer had lost too much blood before and she died in a very short time.

Capt. William H. W. Kelly Dead

Capt. William H. W. Kelly, 71 years old, formerly of Somerset county, died at his home, 1304 Light street, Baltimore, early Tuesday morning, July 13th, after a lingering illness. Death was due to a complication of diseases. Two years ago Captain Kelly was stricken with apoplexy and for year had been confined to his home.

He was a native of Somerset county and for years was in command of sailing vessels on the Chesapeake. He retired four years ago and went to Baltimore. He is survived by two sons, Messrs. William P. and I. B. Kelly, and one daughter, Mrs. Mary J. Smith. Funeral services was held at the house at 4 o'clock Monday afternoon by Rev. Thomas Lowe, pastor of William Street Independent Methodist Church. The body was brought to Dame's Quarter for burial Tuesday morning.

PRESIDENT TAFT TICKLES NEGROES

Publicly Acknowledges Debt of Gratitude to Delegates For Standing By Him

President Taft in a speech in the East room of the White House to a delegation from the National Civil and Political Negro League last Friday publicly acknowledged his debt of gratitude to the negro delegates to the Republican National Convention pledged and instructed for him, who stood with the Taft forces through the fight.

"I want to say to you," declared the President, "how much I appreciate your standing firm in my behalf at a time when it was intimated to the country that we could not depend upon you. You demonstrated there your appreciation of the accomplishment of the Republican party for your race in the past and your abiding faith in its future friendships; you stood like a solid rock."

The delegation presented resolutions asking for the restoration of the battalion of the Twenty-fifth Infantry that was involved in the Brownsville affair and urging Mr. Taft to recommend a Federal statute against lynching.

The President said in reply that he had done everything possible under the law in regard to the Twenty-fifth Infantry. He deplored lynchings, he said but did not believe that the Federal Government could interfere in the States with criminal cases.

"I say to you, gentlemen," the President added, "that a man who has been engaged in lynching within the Federal jurisdiction who comes up to me for executive clemency will have his petition received with that feeling upon my part that there is no crime that ought to be more severely punished and more completely condemned."

The Wicomico Fair

The directors of the Wicomico Fair Association are exerting every effort to make the fair on August 13, 14, 15 and 16 in Salisbury the banner event of all fairs ever held on the Peninsula, and the list of free attractions on the grounds daily, along with the large exhibits in household articles, fruits, live stock and machinery, and the exceptional classes of racing, point to the accomplishment of such a purpose. Already many horsemen have made entries. The track at the fair grounds is an exceptionally good one. The association has offered an additional $100 to any owner whose horses reduce the track record of 2.10 1/2, made last year by Wheeler Wilkes.

The management has contracted with the Curtiss Aeroplane Company to send one of its aviators here for the four days, and in addition to daily flights over the grounds and city an altitude flight will be made each day. There will be running races added to the program on the flat and steeplechasing and aerial exhibitions by acrobats. The full line of free attractions will cost the management over $8,000.

The Maryland Agricultural College, Delaware College and several large stock farms of New Jersey and New York will place exhibits, and the live stock will be the finest ever seen on the "shore." There will be a large display of machinery.

O'Malley Drops Suit For State Auditor

John F. O'Malley, the Howard county Democratic politician last Wednesday dropped his suit to compel Governor Goldsborough to administer the oath to him as State Auditor. The case was dismissed before the Circuit Court of Anne Arundel county upon the order of State Senator Edward M. Hammond, who was Mr. O'Malley's lawyer.

O'Malley's fight for this office, which has been going on for the last four months, is now at end and is believed that the Board of Public Works will meet within the next few weeks and elect an auditor. The probabilities are that there will be scores of applicants for the place, which is one of the best-paying and most desirable in the State.

B. C. and A. Move is Blocked

The Inter-State Commerce Commission recently blocked the proposed tariffs of the Baltimore, Chesapeake and Atlantic Railway relative to the transportation of baggage exceeding in dimensions 45 and 70 inches, which were to have become effective July 15th, pending investigation by the commission of the legality of the new baggage restrictions. The Baltimore, Chesapeake and Atlantic had proposed to institute baggage regulations which tended to prohibit certain articles being called as personal baggage.

WILSON PICKS BATTLE CHIEFS

Fourteen Men Selected To Direct Wilson's Fight for Election Next November

The Democratic campaign committee, which will have supreme charge of the presidential campaign, was named Thursday night by Governor Wilson. It consists of fourteen members, with William F. McCoombs, the chairman of the Democratic National Committee, as chairman.

The other members are: Robert S. Hudspeth, of New Jersey; Joseph Daniels, of North Carolina; Willard Saulsbury, of Delaware; Robert L. Ewing, of Louisiana; A. Mitchell Palmer, of Pennsylvania; Joseph E. Davies, of Wisconsin; Will R. King, of Oregon, all of whom are members of the national committee; and Senators Thomas P. Gore, of Oklahoma; James A. O'Gorman, of New York, and James A. Reed, of Missouri; Representatives Daniel J. McGillicuddy, of Maine; Albert S. Burleson, of Texas, and William G. McAdoo, of New York city.

The appointment of a vice chairman was postponed. No action was taken on the appointment of a treasurer or finance committee. Headquarters will be opened within a few days in Chicago and New York and a later date in some western city as yet undecided on.

Each member of the delegation of 10 leaders who waited upon the Governor at his summer home, at Sea Girt, N. J., Thursday afternoon to help select the campaign committee was given a place in that body. Mr. McCoombs, as national chairman, was given the chairmanship of the campaign committee. The other nine men who aided the Governor in his selection were Committeemen Daniels, Davies, Saulsbury, Hudspeth and Palmer, Senators Gore and O'Gorman, Representatives Burleson and Mr. McAdoo.

After the meeting Chairman McCoombs announced that the campaign committee would hold its first meeting at an early date to appoint various subcommittees, among them being the advisory committee, press committee and finance committee.

As to the latter, he thought it would consist of 35 or 40 men representing, of course, every section of the United States. Names had hardly been reached in considering this committee, he added. In addition he said there would be appointed a finance committee representing every state in the Union. The national committee from each state, he declared, would be asked to suggest the name of the man best qualified in his state and these names would receive first consideration.

The committee was announced by the Governor, who added: "It is a matter of gratification that it all worked out so admirably." The appointment of the campaign committee is but the first act, the Governor said, of the real organization of the campaign. "It will be thorough and carried out to the smallest detail, no section being neglected or overlooked."

In taking from the direct charge of the national committee the management of the campaign, the chairman, McCoombs, said that there had been no intent to supersede that body. Every national committeeman, the chairman stated, would have all he could do during the campaign, independently of the campaign committee, and the nominee and the chairman will make use of the services of ever one.

The campaign committee is largely composed of men who stayed by the Governor in his fight for the nomination. A notable exception in Senator Reed, of Missouri, who was one of the warmest supporters of Champ Clark. Another man whose name had not been mentioned in connection with the campaign committee is former Judge King, of Oregon, who from the bench sustained the validity of the initiative and referendum in Oregon and after retiring recently won his contention in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Will Stop "Greening" of Canned Peas and Beans

The use of copper salts in the "greening" of foods, principally canned peas and beans, will be prohibited after January 1 next by a pure food decision signed last week by Secretary Wilson. The Ramsen board, after studying the question three years, reported that "copper salts used in the greening of vegetables may have the effect of concealing inferiority" and further that "even small quantities of copper must be considered injurious to health."

Vegetables "freshened" with copper salts will be considered adulterated under the pure food law.

might fancy almost a warmer sparkle of mute admiration! And her face, on a sudden, grew cold.

"Certes, your Ladyship sets them an example!" murmured the audacious fellow. "Though, pard!—one not easy to imitate!"

She threw back her head, proudly, imperiously; the brown eyes gleamed, and certain sharp words of reproach were about to spring from her lips, when abruptly, above the sound of the music, a trumpet call, afar, rang out. My lady—not sorry perhaps of the pretext—at once stopped.

"I thank your Ladyship," said the man and bowed low.

But the governor's daughter seemed, or affected, not to hear, regarding the other dancers, who likewise had come to a standstill—the two musicians looking up from instruments now silent. A moment yet the young fisherman lingered; seemed about once more to voice his acknowledgments, but, catching the dull eye of a peasant, stepped back instead.

"Saprist! They might, at least, have waited until the end of the dance!" he muttered, and with a final look over his shoulder and a low laugh, disappeared in the crowd.

"Where are the enemy?" It was the marquis who spoke—in accents he strove to make light and thereby conceal, perhaps, possible annoyance. Coming forward, he looked around toward the point whence the sound had proceeded. "If I mistake not," a note of inquiry in his tone, "it means—a call to arms!"

My lady bit her lips; her eyes still gleamed with the bright cold light of a topaz. "Why—a call to arms?" she asked somewhat petulantly, raising her hand to her hair, a little disarranged in the dance.

"Perhaps, as a part of the military discipline?" murmured the marquis dubiously. "See!" With sudden interest, he indicated a part of the Mount that had been black against the star-spangled sky, now showing sickly points of light. "It does mean something! They are coming down!"

And even as the marquis spoke, a clatter of hoofs on the stone pavement leading from the Mount to the sand ushered a horseman into view. He was followed by another and yet another, until in somewhat desultory fashion, owing to the tortuous difficulties of the narrow way that had separated them above, an array of mounted men was gathered at the base of the rock. But only for a moment; a few words from one of their number, evidently in command, and they dispersed; some to ride around the Mount to the left, others to the right.

"Perhaps Elise will enlighten us?" Of one accord her guests now crowded around the girl.

"Does the governor intend to take us prisoners?"

"You imply it is necessary to do that—to keep you?" answered my lady.

"Then why?" Her expression, as perplexed as theirs, answered.

"Beppo!" She waved her hand.

The governor's servant, who was passing, with an anxious, inquiring look upon his face, glanced around.

"Beppo!" she repeated, and beckoned again.

The man approached. "Your Ladyship wishes to speak with me?" he asked in a voice he endeavored to make unconcerned.

"I do." In her manner the old antipathy she had felt toward him as a child again became manifest. "What do the soldiers want? Why have they come down?"

His eyes shifted. "I—my Lady—"

he stammered.

The little foot struck the strand.

"Why don't you answer? You heard my question?"

"I am sorry, my Lady—"

Again he hesitated: "Le Seigneur Noir has been seen on the beach!"

"Why—a Call to Arms?"

"Le Seigneur Noir?" she repeated.

"Yes, my Lady. He was caught sight of among the peasants, at the time the barrels were opened, in accordance with your Ladyship's command. I assure your Ladyship, with growing eagerness, 'there can be no mistake, as—'

"Who," interrupted my lady sharply, "is this Black Seigneur?"

Beppo's manner changed. "A man," he said solemnly, "his Excellency, the governor, has long been most anxious to capture."

The girl's eyes flashed with impatience, and then she began to laugh. "Saw you ever, my lords and ladies, his equal for equivocation? You put to him the question direct, and he answers—"

The loud report of a carbine from the other side of the Mount, followed by a desultory volley, interrupted her. The laughter died on her lips; the color left her cheek.

"What—" The startled look in her eyes completed the sentence. Beppo rubbed his hands softly. "His Excellency takes no chances!" he murmured.

CHAPTER VI.

A Messenger for My Lady. "So you failed to capture him, Monsieur le Commandant?"

The speaker, the Marquis de Beauvilliers, leaned more comfortably back in his chair in the small, rather bare furnished barracks' sitting-room in which he found himself later that night and languidly surveyed the flustered countenance of the man in uniform before him.

"No, Monsieur le Marquis," said the latter, endeavoring to conceal any evidence of mortification or ill humor in the presence of a visitor so distinguished; "we didn't. But, as it is to turn the conversation, with a gesture toward a well-laden table, 'I should feel honored if—'

"Thank you, no! After our repast on the beach—however, stand on no ceremony yourself. Nay, I insist—"

"If Monsieur le Marquis insists!"

The commandant drew up his chair; then, reaching for a bottle, poured out a glass of wine, which he offered his guest.

"No, no!" said the marquis. "But as I remarked before, stand on no ceremony!" And daintily opening a snuff-box, he watched his host with an expression half-amused, half-ironical.

That person ate and drank with little relish; the wine—so he said—had spoiled; and the dishes were without flavor; it was fortunate Monsieur le Marquis had no appetite—

Whereupon the marquis smiled; but, considering the circumstances, in his own mind excused the commandant, who had only just come from the governor's palace, and who, after the interview that undoubtedly had ensued, could hardly be expected to find the pate palatable, or the wine to his liking. This, despite the complaisance of the young nobleman whom the commandant had encountered, while descending from the governor's abode, and who, adapting his step to the other's had accompanied the officer back to his quarters, and graciously accepted an invitation to enter.

"Well, you know the old saying," the marquis closed the box with a snap, "There's many a slip—but how," airily brushing with his handkerchief imaginary particles from a long lace cuff, "did he get away?"

"He had got away before we were down on the beach. It was a wild-goose chase, at best. And so I told his Excellency, the governor—"

"A thankless task, no doubt! But the shots we heard—"

"An imbecile soldier saw a shadow; fired at it, and—"

"The others followed suit," laughed the visitor.

"Exactly!" The commandant's face grew red; fiercely he pulled his mustache. "What can one expect, when they make soldiers out of every dunderpate that comes along?"

"True!" assented the marquis. "But this fellow, this Black Seigneur—why is the governor so anxious to lay hands on him? Who is he, and what has he done? I confess," languidly, "to a mild curiosity."

"He's a privateer and an outlaw, and has done enough to hang himself a dozen times—"

"When you capture him?" interposed the visitor lightly. A moment he studied the massive oak beams of the ceiling. "Why do they call him the Black Seigneur? An odd sobriquet!"

"His father was a Seigneur—the last of the fief of Desaurac. The Seigneurs have all been fair men for generations, while this fellow—"

"Then he has noble blood in him?"

The marquis showed surprise. "Where is the fief?"

"The woods on the shore mark the beginning of it."

"But—I don't understand. The father was a Seigneur; the son—"

Bluntly the commandant explained; the son was a natural child; the mother, a common peasant woman whom the former Seigneur had taken to his house—

"I see!" The young nobleman tapped his knee. "And that being the case—"

"Under the terms of the ancient grant, there being no legal heir, the lands were confiscated to the crown. His Excellency, however, had already bought many of the incumbrances against this property, and in view of this, and his services to the king, the fief, declared forfeited by the courts, was subsequently granted and deeded, without condition, to the governor."

"To the governor," repeated the marquis.

"Who at once began a rare clearing-out; forcing the peasants who for years had not been paying metayage, to meet this just requirement, or—move away!"

"And did some of them object?"

"They did; but his Excellency found means. The most troublesome were arrested and taken to the Mount, where they have had time to reflect—his Excellency believes in no half-way measures with peasants."

"A rich principle, no doubt! But to himself spoke the marquis.

"I have heard," blurted the commandant, "he's going to give it to the Lady Elise; restore the old castle and turn the grounds surrounding it into a noble park."

The visitor frowned, as if little liking the introduction of the lady's name into the conversation. "And what did the Black Seigneur do then," he asked coldly, "when he found his lands gone?"

"Claimed it was a plot—that his mother was an honest woman, though neither the priest who performed the ceremony nor the marriage records could be found. He even resisted at first—refused to be turned out—and, skulking about the forest with his gun, kept the deputies at bay. But they surrounded him at last; drove him to his castle, and would have captured him, only he escaped that night, and took to the high seas, where he has been making trouble ever since!"

"Trouble?" "He has seriously hampered his Excellency's commerce; interfered with his ships, and crippled his trade with the Orient."

"But—the governor has many boats, many men. Why have they failed to capture him?"

"For a number of reasons. In the first place he is one of the most skillful pilots on the coast; when hard pressed, he does not hesitate to use even the Isles des Rochers as a place of refuge."

"The Isles des Rochers?" queried the nobleman.

"A chevaux-de-frise of the sea, my lord!" continued the commandant; "where fifty barren isles are fortified by a thousand rocks; frothing fangs when the tide is low; sharp teeth that lie in wait to bite when the smiling lips of the treacherous waters have closed above! There, the governor's ships have followed him on several occasions, and—few of them have come back!"

"But surely there must be times when he can not depend on that retreat?"

"There are, my lord. His principal harbor and resort is a little isle farther north—English, they call it—that offers refuge at any time to miscreants from France. There may they lie peacefully, as in a cradle; or go ashore with impunity, and the like. Oh, he is safe enough there. Home for French exiles, they designate the place. Exiles! Bah! It was there he first found means to get his ship—sharing his profits, no doubt, with the islanders who built her. There, too, he mustered his crew—savage peasants who had been turned off the lands of the old Seigneur; fisher-folk who had become outlaws rather than pay to the governor just dues from the sea; men fled from the ban of the mill, of the oven, of the wine-press—"

"Still must he be a redoubtable fellow, to have done what he did to-night; to have dared mingle with the people under the governor's very guns!"

"The people! He has nothing to fear from them. An ignorant, low, disloyal lot! They look upon this fellow as a hero. He has played his cards well, sends money to the lazy, worthless ones, under pretext that they are poor, over-taxed, over-burdened. In his company is one Gabriel Gabarie, a poet of the people, as he is styled, who keeps in touch with those stirring trouble in Paris. Perhaps they hope for an insurrection there, and then—"

"An insurrection?" The marquis' delicate features expressed ironical protest; he dismissed the possibility with an airy wave of the hand. "One should never anticipate trouble, Monsieur le Commandant," he said lightly and rose. "Good night."

"Good night, Monsieur le Marquis," returned the officer with due deference, and accompanied his noble visitor to the door.

At first, without the barracks, the marquis walked easily on, but soon the steepness of the narrow road, becoming more marked as it approached the commanding structures at the top of the Mount, caused his gait gradually to slacken; then he paused altogether, at an upper platform.

From where he stood, by day could be seen, almost directly beneath, the tiny habitations of men clinging like lizards to the precipitous sides of the rocks at the base; now was visible only a void, an abyss, out of which swam the sea; so far below, a boat looked no larger than a gull on its silver surface; so immense, the dancing waves seemed receding to a limit beyond the reach of the heavens.

"You found him?" A girl's clear voice broke suddenly upon him. He wheeled.

"Elise! You!"

"Yes! why not? You found him?"

The commandant?"

"At your command, but—"

"And learned all?"

"All he could tell."

"It is reported at the castle that the man escaped!" quickly.

"It is true. But," in a voice of languid surprise, "I believe you are glad—"

"No, no!" She shook her head.

"Only," a smile curved her lips, "Beppo will be so disappointed! Now," seating herself lightly on the low wall of the giant rampart, "tell me all you have learned about this Black Seigneur."

The marquis considered; with certain reservations obeyed. At the conclusion of his narrative, she spoke no word and he turned to her inquiringly. Her brows were knit; her eyes down-bent. A moment he regarded her in silence; then she looked up at him suddenly.

"I wonder," she said, her face bathed in the moonlight, "if it was this Black Seigneur I danced with?"

"The Black Seigneur?" My lord started; frowned. "Nonsense! What an absurd fancy! He would not have dared!"

"True," said the girl quickly. "You are right, my lord. It is absurd. He would not have dared."

What Makes a Woman?

One hundred and twenty pounds, more or less, of bone and muscle don't make a woman. Its a good foundation. Put into it health and strength and she may rule a kingdom. But that's just what Electric Bitters give her. Thousands bless them for overcoming fainting and dizzy spells and for dispelling weakness, nervousness, backache and tired, listless, worn-out feeling. #### Precepts and Practices.

A mother had impressed upon the mind of her little boy the importance of keeping the commandments. One day he was tempted to take an orange from a basket where he could do so without being detected. He had not, however, gone far before it came into his mind. "Thou shalt not steal." His conscience was troubled. He thought he would carry it back at once, but then it was so nice. He, however, decided at last to be honest with the command and not to steal. So he returned it and went away, if not with the orange, with what was better, a clear conscience. When his mother asked him if he had been a good boy all the day he was a little confused and said:

"I don't know; pretty good. I guess I haven't broken any of the commandments, but I guess I cracked one of them."—Mack's Monthly.

The Mustache.

The home of the mustache is in Spain, and here is the history of its origin: After the Moors first invaded the country the Christian and Moslem population became so mixed that it was difficult to say which were Moors, and which Spaniards. The Spaniards then hit upon a means by which they could at once distinguish their brethren. They did not shave their lips any longer, and they allowed a tuft of hair to grow below their under lips, so that their beards formed the rude outline of a cross. Thus the mustache became a symbol of liberty and fraternity—Exchange.

First Use of "Magazine."

"Magazine," properly a storehouse (Arabian), has been annexed by literature, but it is interesting to assist at the birth of its now common literary use—in that venerable periodical, the Gentleman's Magazine. In the introduction to its number (1731) we read, "This consideration has induced several gentlemen to treasure up, as in a magazine, the most remarkable pieces on the subjects above mentioned."—London Times.

Hot Applications.

As a substitute for hot water bags in ordinary ailments, such as toothache, earache and other minor pains, use common flannel bags made in convenient sizes, with drawstrings. Fill them with hot sand or salt and they are safer than a cheap rubber bottle, just as efficacious and much handier to use. Keep half a dozen ready. They are of great help in time of aches and pains.—Ave Maria.

Butter on His Pie.

Mr. MacNaughton, millionaire lumber merchant, gazed at the check, which had just been handed him with a solemn face.

"Doesn't it look big enough?" asked the man who had made out the check. "Oh, it's big enough," said MacNaughton, "but there's nothing looks very big these days. I'm minded of the first days I spent in this country—no matter how many years ago—that was when money looked big to me."

"When I landed I went with a friend that had been over here six months to the house where he boarded and lodged, and well, too, for a sum that appears ridiculous to me now, as I look back to it."

"When we were in the midst of the dinner that was my first meal Sandy MacLaughlin put his mouth close to my ear and whispered to me: 'Put butter on your pie, Angus. Three dollars a week is nae joke.'"

Couldn't Beat Him.

It was of Dr. Whewell, the famous master of Trinity, that Sydney Smith said, "If science was his forte, omniscience was his folbie." Concerning this folbie an amusing story is told.

A rival talker resolved for once to get the better of Whewell and crammed the subject of Chinese metaphysics. He lost no time in dexterously leading the conversation toward the topic and at once fluently and confidently expressed his opinions, when, to his astonishment, Whewell rushed into the subject quite at home and in direct contradiction to his views. "Sir," said the master, "will you have the goodness to give me the authority upon which the opinions you have expressed are based?" "Certainly," said his opponent—"an article in the Encyclopedia Britannica." "Oh!" said Whewell. "I wrote the article myself ten years ago and have since seen good reasons to change my views!"

Washington's Tomb.

At the late date of 1827 a wish expressed by General Washington in his will was obeyed. He had called attention to his selection of a spot for a new tomb for himself and family and those of the family already buried in the old vault. The old tomb was disadvantageously situated on the side of a hill which was subject to landslides. For the new vault he specified not only the spot, but also dimensions and materials. According to these, his own plans, a tomb was built, and his and Mrs. Washington's bodies were transferred to it, along with the remains in the old vault of other members of the family. The latter were buried together within the vault, out of sight, while the bodies of General and Mrs. Washington are in stone coffins above the ground, within plain view between the slender bars of a grated iron doorway. It is for this reason that the most illustrious of our dead has so simple a mausoleum—obedience to his wish.

"Votes For Women"

The above headline on a poster circulated through Princess Anne last Wednesday in advance of a meeting held under the auspices of the Just Government League of Maryland that evening was another warning to the stern sex that it is only a question of time before the lords of creation will not be alone when election time comes around. Those who passed this warning unheeded are persons unaware of the rapid strides that are being made in the cause of woman suffrage and they should have attended the meeting and heard how far behind Maryland still is in its duty of chivalrous deference, so far as voting is concerned, to the members of the fair sex. The good time, however, is coming, so say the women who have studied the question and who understand the persuasive influence that fair woman knows only too well how to utilize.

This is not the first time, however, that Princess Anne men have had their attention directed to this important question. It was only a year or two ago that an effort was made to permit women to vote in our town elections and when deep distress prevailed that there should be disappointment. It is a cruel Constitution and a cruel law that denies to fragrant womanhood the expression on public questions that their intelligence should command. For ourselves we are proud to say that the editor and foreman of the MARYLANDER AND HERALD staff, who are the only married men in the office, are far too responsive to home ties to permit their own opinions to defy the too well known home expression. We shall vote aye on the proposition and we shall further hold ourselves in readiness to take up the cudgel against any who differ from us.

But in graver strain, there are many good reasons why woman's vote should prove a valuable acquisition. There are matters of deep concern to home, family, schools, health and the like, that men too often fail to regard and when women would come to a happy rescue. Then too there are plenty of women who are large property owners and who are without the counsel of men in their homes, whose right to speak upon questions of taxation and other important matters should be unquestioned. As the charming ladies who addressed the Wednesday meeting so emphatically said, the time is coming, we join in the refrain: Let it come!

How Maryland Will Vote

The Baltimore American has at last recovered from the great shock it sustained when the Presidential preference primary vote in Maryland resulted in favor of Roosevelt, instead of President Taft. The American had earnestly supported the President and confidently predicted a victory for him up to the eve of the primary contest. Now it again ventures a political prediction. "When November comes," it says, "Maryland will be right in line for Taft."

Maryland has been looked upon as a Democratic State, but in 1896 and 1900 it was carried by McKinley by large majorities. In 1904 it gave a meagre plurality of 51 for Roosevelt, and in 1908 it gave seven electoral votes to Bryan and one to Taft.

Between times, however, Maryland went Democratic, except at the State election of 1911, when the Democratic nominee for Governor was defeated although the Democratic ticket was headed by a good man, the present Governor, William D. Swann, who was elected in 1902, 1892, and 1882.

Our Next President

With striking unanimity, the great newspapers of the country the men behind the pens—rally to the support of Woodrow Wilson for President of the United States.

Not since 1892 has there been a Presidential candidate with such remarkable press support, the country over. Not since 1892 has there been a Democratic candidate with such sure victory ahead.

Men like Watterson who were not expected to support the ticket are in and in good time. Newspapers like the World and Sun, the big New York papers, the Boston and Chicago press that is worth while and even Hearst's papers—including the New York American—are for Wilson for President. It is an amazing showing. The American newspapers are welcomed once again on the side of the people and progress.

Tax Levy Seems Wrong

A request for information regarding the State tax rate for 1913, made last week by Judge Leser, president of the Appeal Tax Court, developed a tangle which, at first, it was thought, could be straightened out by an extra session of the Legislature. The State rate for 1912 is not involved. From printed copies of the act it appears that the State levy for next year is 1 1/2 cents out of the way. The apportionment of the tax totals 29 1/2 cents, instead of 31 cents, as was intended. This was caused by the omission of a tax of 2 cents for the first insane hospital loan and 2 cents for the State roads loan of 1910.

The most serious feature of the case is the fact that through the apportionment, as it appears in the printed act, there is a levy of 5 1/2 cents for the State hospital loan, instead of for the State roads loan, as was intended.

On investigation of conditions it was decided that a special session of the General Assembly would not be necessary, but that the situation was covered by the State roads law and the State insane law of 1908. Instead of paying only 5 1/2 cents for the State roads levy, however, the taxpayers will be obliged to pay 6 cents as provided in the roads loan act.

The original and correct bill fixing the state tax rate for 1913 and 1914 and defining the several objects for which the tax is to be collected was found at Annapolis Thursday. Governor Goldsborough announced that he will request the attendance of President Price, of the Senate, and Speaker Trippe at Annapolis on Thursday next, when he will affix his signature to the measure.

By signing this bill the complication arising from the incorrect and incomplete bill already signed will be removed.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address, F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio. Sold by Druggists, 75 cents. Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

Typhoid Lurks in Wells

The rural sections, long considered ideal so far as concerns the health of their inhabitants, have been dealt a blow by physician investigators who maintain that two-thirds of the cases of typhoid fever in the city owe their origin to unsanitary conditions in the country and to polluted water supplies.

Farms, which are generally remote from towns, cities, or other areas of congested population, would seem to be almost ideally situated for obtaining pure and wholesome water, but in reality polluted water is exceedingly common in them and typhoid-fever rates are usually greater in country districts than in cities. Typhoid fever is now almost universally believed to be transmitted solely through drink or food taken into the stomach, and is especially liable to be communicated by polluted waters obtained from shallow wells near spots where the discharges of typhoid patients have been thrown upon the ground and subsequently carried down through the soil and to the wells, and it is doubtless principally this fact that accounts for the disease being so common in farming regions.

On a great many farms the well is located at a point that may be convenient to the dwelling, without any regard for the possibility of the pollution of the well water through seepage from barn or cesspool or through the circulation of water underground. Information relating to the underground movement of water is particularly valuable, and on this account the United States Geological Survey is distributing a report on the subject—Water-Supply Paper 225—"Underground Waters for Farm Use," by Myron L. Fuller. The demand for this publication has necessitated a third reprint. A copy of the report may be obtained by addressing the Director of the Survey at Washington, D. C.

If you are a housewife you cannot reasonably hope to be healthy or beautiful by washing dishes, sweeping and doing housework all day, and crawling into bed dead tired at night. You must get out into the open air and sunlight. If you do this every day and keep your stomach and bowels in good order by taking Chamberlain's Tablets when needed, you should become both healthy and beautiful. For sale by all dealers.

The Just Government League of Maryland held a public meeting at the Auditorium in this town last Wednesday evening. The evening was warm and the audience was small. The meeting was presided over by Hon. Joshua W. Miles, who introduced the ladies who made addresses. Mrs. Nannie Melvin and her daughter, Miss Delia Melvin, formerly of Denton but now of Baltimore, gave instructive and entertaining talks upon the subject of clothing women with suffrage and gave reasons why Maryland should follow the lead of other states. Mrs. Melvin and her daughter are both sanguine that the day is not far distant when women will be permitted to vote upon public matters, that so materially affect school and family life as well as general public interests. At the conclusion of the meeting a collection was taken to assist in defraying the expenses of the League.

Good roads are a highway to market; they enable the farmer and the merchant to carry much larger loads at the same or less expense; they bring railroads and steamboats closer to the farms and enable the shipper to get his goods to the markets in the best condition, thereby securing the highest prices for his property. Any dirt road that is properly drained, with well cleaned ditches on one or both sides, and properly rounded, will be good road.

The Technical School

Although the Act of the Legislature providing for the creation of a School of Advanced Technology in connection with the Johns Hopkins University did not contemplate the opening of the School prior to October 1913, the University is anxious to show its appreciation of the trust committed to it by beginning the preliminary work of technical education at the earliest possible moment.

While it is clearly impossible to organize and open the School of Technology in October 1912, the University authorities have decided to take the first step at once. There are now in the University courses of instruction which are essential to technology. Qualified students planning to enter the School of Technology, when it is organized, will be admitted in October 1912. They are advised to take the regular entrance examination of the University. Those unable to meet the entrance requirements in full, but who pass satisfactory examinations in English, in Mathematics or Latin, and in French or German, will be admitted to such courses as they are prepared to enter. (See catalogue of the College of Arts and Sciences, 1912, page 60).

In order to enable worthy and deserving students to enter the courses preliminary to technical education this year, the University has also determined to offer to a limited number of young men in Maryland temporary or special scholarships providing free tuition. The temporary scholarships will be purely voluntary on the part of the University and will not be the scholarships provided by the law establishing the Technical School. The holders of these special scholarships, however, may be eligible to compete later on for the regular scholarships as provided in the law. The special scholarships will be good for one year. It will be obviously difficult to apportion them on any systematic basis. It is suggested, therefore, that any young man in the State whose preliminary education in such as to qualify him to take the special courses referred to, and who desires to enter the University in the fall of 1912, shall communicate with the Registrar of the University and receive from him the necessary blank form of application. In case the candidate wishes to apply for a scholarship, he should give his reasons and state all the facts bearing upon the matter. In September the application will be considered on its merits.

A Fierce Wind Storm

A windstorm almost approaching a hurricane Sunday evening swept over lower Jersey, Maryland and Delaware doing great property damage, especially to crops. At Atlantic City the storm blew down buildings on the pier, started electric fires and imperiled yachts. In Cecil county, Maryland, in the section near Elkton, several persons were injured, one perhaps fatally, buildings were demolished and telegraph and telephone wires were blown down. Around Vineland, N. J., the storm did great damage to crops. Corn was laid flat and the wind shook off peaches and apples. In Vineland the electric light plant was put out of business.

The storm struck Princess Anne about 6.30 o'clock and broke the limbs off of many trees in the town. What damage done throughout the county we have not heard.

Miss Carrie Gunby Dead

Miss Carrie L. Gunby, a well-known resident of Crisfield, died at her home on Somerset avenue on Monday afternoon, July 15th. Miss Gunby was engaged for years in the dry goods business in that town.

The funeral services were held on Wednesday morning at 9.30 o'clock, conducted by the Rev. J. Vernon Ashworth, rector of the Episcopal Church, and Louis Randall, pastor of Mt. Pleasant Church, of Crisfield. The interment was made in St. Paul's Cemetery, near Marion Station. The pallbearers were Messrs. Ernest, Paul L. and Warren C. Gunby, State's Attorney Gordon Tull and Messrs. E. W. and Frank Tull. All are relatives of the deceased.

Named Head of Frostburg School

The State Board of Education met Wednesday at the Hotel Rennett, Baltimore and elected Mr. Edward F. Webb principal of the Frostburg Normal School. For the past several years Mr. Webb has been principal of the Belair High School and is regarded as one of the best educators in the State. He formerly lived in Cambridge and is a graduate of Washington College. Mr. Webb will assume his duties at the beginning of the next scholastic year. He succeeds Dr. R. H. Ridgely, who resigned.

The board discussed the improvement and new addition to be built at the Frostburg school, for which the last Legislature appropriated $25,000.

Dorchester's Tax Rate $1.25

The Dorchester County Commissioners have fixed the tax levy for 1912 at $1.25. As the new general assessment of 1910 increased the taxable basis almost 100 per cent, the 1912 tax bills will be heavy. Some of the items which enter into the jump of 25 cents on the $100 over the rate last year are $10,000 for the county's portion of the cost of building the stone road a portion of the way from Vienna to the Big Mills, $3,000 interest and sinking fund for the Vienna and East Newmarket High School buildings, $13,000 for roads and bridges and $25,000 for paying off a portion of the floating indebtedness of the county.

In Memoriam

In loving remembrance of my dear husband, Zadoc T. Gibbons, who departed this life five years ago July 28th, 1907.

A home was stricken with sorrow
When Zadoc was taken away;
And grief throws its gloom o'er the morrow
And darkens the face of its day.

To all the dear loved ones that were dwelling
In the old home that shall know us no more
As we were constantly talking
Of the husband and father that has gone before.

By His Wife and Only Child.

In loving remembrance of my dear and only son, Russell Gibbons, who departed this life three years ago July 24th, 1909.

Russell, thou art sadly sleeping
In the churchyard at home;
I am left here weeping
In this dark world of gloom.

But I am trusting to meet you
Where kindred part no more;
And we will journey hand in hand
Along that heavenly shore.

By His Loving Mother and Sister.

The Couple Opposite

By F. A. MITCHEL

Will and Edith Dutcher rolled into the station on their return from their wedding trip at 10 o'clock at night and, taking up their hand baggage, left the train, called a carriage and were driven to the home that had been prepared for them by the bride's parents. They had been away long enough for the entire preparation of the house during their absence, and they had never seen it. But they had been sent the key by express and informed that the number was 34 and the street Washington avenue.

After turning into the thoroughfare at a point where he saw a number—18—the driver counted the houses he passed—for no more numbers were visible—till he came to what he thought might be 34 and stopped. The bride and groom alighted, paid the fare and the carriage departed. Then Mr. Dutcher took out the night key and, mounting the steps of the house before him, attempted to effect an entrance. The key didn't work.

It had been expected that the young couple would return when they liked, go into the house alone and manage every detail to suit themselves. Therefore there was no light in the hall, and as the number was placed on glass over the vestibule door a light was required to see it. The consequence was that the couple were trying to get into a house without being sure it was theirs. Mr. Dutcher went out on to the stoop and looked about him, but since all the houses in the vicinity were alike he didn't learn much.

"I never knew one of these fancy little keys to work," he said. "At any rate, this one doesn't. There's usually a window sash loose somewhere. We'll try that way."

After experimenting awhile he found that one of the windows of the kitchen had been left unfastened, and all he had to do was to raise it and walk in. Then, opening the door from the inside, he admitted his wife. They were very tired, and after a glance at the parlor and dining room, the furnishing of which they admired, they went upstairs. There was a bedroom on each side of the upper hall, the door of one standing open. It looked inviting, and, entering, they threw off their garments, put on their nightgowns and went to bed.

When they awoke in the morning Mr. Dutcher thought he would get up and use the bathroom first. Opening the bedroom door, he stood stock still in astonishment. The door of the opposite room stood open, and in it stood a man also arrayed in nightclothes looking at Mr. Dutcher with as much amazement as Mr. Dutcher looked at him.

"Well, sir!" said the man.
"Well, sir!" repeated Mr. Dutcher.
"What are you doing in my house, sir?"

"Your house? What are you doing in my house?"

At this point the face of a lady appeared in the doorway behind the man opposite, and, Mrs. Dutcher having got out of bed to investigate the cause of this strange conversation, there were two men and two women all in "evening dress" looking at one another as if faced by some inexplicable occurrence. Then each lady, realizing that she was gazed upon by a strange man, gave a little shriek and retreated from the foreground.

"I demand an explanation," said the man opposite, "of this unwarranted occupation of a room in my house without my invitation or consent."

"And I demand to know who you are, sir, and why you have come into a house that has been prepared for me and my wife on our return from our wedding trip."

"Then you are married?"
"Married! Of course I am—we are married. Do you mean to add insult to injury? I see. My house having been unoccupied, you have taken it upon yourself to use it for a nefarious purpose."

"I have a mind, sir, to throw you out the window."

"You'd better try it."

The two men glared at each other. Mrs. Dutcher, who meanwhile had gathered her wits, sang out:

"What number is this house?"

"Thirty-six," replied a feminine voice opposite.

"Oh, horrors!" cried Mrs. Dutcher.

"Thirty-six!" exclaimed her husband.

"Thirty-six Washington avenue."

"My dear, sir," said Mr. Dutcher, much agitated, "I fear we have made a mistake."

"If it's only a mistake I shall excuse you, sir."

"Last night my wife and I came to town from our wedding trip, and, supposing this house to be our new home and our key not working."

"Of course your key didn't work. How the dickens could you expect it to work on my front door?"

"I tell you I expected it to work on my own front door. We will dress as soon as possible and get out immediately."

The couple opposite retreated and closed their door. Mr. and Mrs. Dutcher dressed, went downstairs and met the owners of the house. The face of each wore a smile. Mr. and Mrs. Dutcher's faces did not wear a smile, but they were induced to sit down to a good breakfast, and before it was finished the party was roaring with laughter.

Then the couple who had returned from their honeymoon went to their own home.

THOROUGH WORK

How Princess Anne Citizens Can Find Freedom From Kidney Trouble

If you suffer from backache—From urinary disorders—Any curable disease of the kidneys, Use a tested kidney remedy. Doan's Kidney Pills have been tested by thousands.

Grateful people testify. Can you ask more convincing proof of merit?

Arthur Holland, Landonville, Md., says: "I have had no further symptoms of kidney complaint since Doan's Kidney Pills cured me three years ago. You may continue to use the testimonial I gave at the time my cure was made. My kidneys were greatly disordered and I suffered from rheumatic twinges. Often my shoulders ached and I could hardly endure the pain across the back. If I stooped, sharp twinges caught me. A friend advised me to give Doan's Kidney Pills a trial and I got a supply. I used them and from that time to this, I have not had a symptom of kidney complaint."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents, Foster-Milbourn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States. Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

A German Wedding.

The German wedding feast is a Gargantuan meal which puts the guests' powers of stoic, cheerful endurance to the test. Between the bride and the bridegroom sits the officiating minister, who makes a speech in their honor. Then the father of the bridegroom makes a speech in honor of the bride's family, and the father of the bride makes a speech in honor of the bridegroom's family. Then come in the guests, the ladies, everybody, till there is nothing left to toast except the wine. All this takes some hours, usually from three to seven, and the pitch rises from degree to degree, especially after the pointedly ignored departure of the bride and bridegroom. The bridal feast is rounded off with a dance.—London Express.

Cynical Advice.

Hugo Arnot, the historian of Edinburgh, was one day waited upon by a woman who requested him to advise her how she might best get rid of an admirer whose importunities caused her annoyance. The woman was the reverse of fascinating, and Arnot, being indisposed to flatter her vanity, replied, "Oh, you had better marry the fellow!"

"Marry him?" replied the astonished woman. "I would see him hanged first!"

"Marry him, then," persisted the humorist, "and I'll bet he'll soon hang himself."—St. Louis Republic.

Changing Ideals.

"You haven't really broken with him," exclaimed Miss Ascum. "Why, I thought he was your ideal."

"So he was," replied Miss Fickell, "but as soon as I find a man who sizes up to my ideal it seems to be my luck to have the fashions in ideals change."—Catholic Standard and Times.

What She Wanted.

Love and Friendship.

Love is the shadow of the morning, which decreases as the day advances. Friendship is the shadow of the evening, which strengthens with the setting sun of life.

The Milk in the Coconut.

A correspondent of the New York Sun, referring to an inquiry respecting the origin and meaning of the saying, "This accounts for the milk in the coconut," says that an answer may be found in the practice remarked by Captain Marryat in one of his novels on the occasion of a ship's visiting the West Indies, as follows:

On the ship's arrival the bumpoat women would dock to its side, plentifully supplied with coconuts, which were eagerly sought by the sailors, and on the occasion described by the author one of the ship's officers had selected a coconut, and the bumpoat woman eagerly interfered to prevent his receiving the one he had selected, saying, "That not for officer; that for sailor." The officer's curiosity being aroused, he asked for a coconut "for officer" and at the same time insisted upon getting the one originally selected by him. On opening the two the one "for officer" was found to be in its natural state, containing the so called milk, whereas the one "for sailor" was found to have had its milk removed and the place thereof supplied by rum. Further examination disclosed that all of the coconuts "for sailor" had thus been treated.

Placing of Building Stone.

It is, generally speaking, the rule of masons that stone used in building should be so placed that it will be as it lay in its natural bed when quarried. This familiar rule is not, however, always to be depended upon and in many cases needs to be supplemented with other precautions. There are three planes of fracture known to quarrymen. The "rift" is the direction in which stone splits most easily; the "grain" that which is next easiest; the "head" that which offers greatest resistance. In a paving block the two sides represent the rift fracture, the top and bottom the grain and the ends the head. But in a quarry the natural bed is sometimes considerably inclined to the plane of the rift; hence the imperfection of the ordinary rule for placing stone in building.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Softening the Blow.

A young Virginia woman who was very ill was approached by her colored servant, who said, "Miss May, mah mothah dun had a cousin what had de same ailments what you dun got." "Yes, so, Cora?" replied the lady. "Yes, sum," responded Cora, encouraged. "But mah mothah's cousin she died. 'Deed she did.' 'Well, Cora,' said her mistress, angry that she should tell her such a tale at such an inopportune time, 'if that's all you have to say to me you can leave the room and don't come in again. I don't want to hear such stories.' Cora was thoroughly frightened at what she had done and wished to ameliorate her ill chosen story, so she thought for a moment and, turning to go, said, 'Well, Miss May, mah mothah tole me she died mighty easy.'"

He Was Posted.

A six-year-old boy was taken to the zoo by his forty-year-old father. They saw the elephant, they saw the monkey, they saw the ox. Finally they got to the ornithological collection. The kid noticed an interesting bird in the eagle cage, and he asked: "Papa, what's that bird?" Papa looked at the label and replied "That is an Austrian eagle."

"Gwan!" said the boy. "It ain't no such thing."

"Yes it is. It says so in the catalogue."

"I don't care what it says in th' catalogue. I got eyes. This here bird ain't got but one head. The Austrian eagle has two heads, an' I know, fer I've saw a pitcher of it on flags!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

For Fast Shooting.

The rifle for rapid firing should have shotgun weight, shotgun balance, shotgun trigger pull, shotgun fit, and the sights must be such as can be caught instantly without effort in alignment. The hands grasp the piece firmly, not with the rifleman's loose grip, but the left arm pushes forward while the right draws back, and the trigger is pulled by transferring the drawing back force to the trigger finger and not by any conscious crooking of that finger. The moment the bead covers the mark the bullet must be under way, be the aim good or bad.—Outing.

A Mother's Answer.

When Earl Ferrars had been convicted of murder great efforts were made to obtain a pardon on the ground that he was insane. His mother being appealed to and requested to write a strong letter on the subject, answered, "Well, but if I do how am I to marry off my daughters?"—Green Bag.

Headstrong.

Mrs. Homer—Don't you thing your husband is rather headstrong for an invalid? Mrs. Neighbor—Yes, and the doctor is to blame for it too. Mrs. Homer—Indeed! And why, pray? Mrs. Neighbor—He won't allow him to take any nourishment but goat's milk.

She Quotes an Authority.

Elsie—When I grow up, mamma, I'm going to be extravagant like you. Mamma—What makes you think I'm extravagant? Elsie—Well, I'm sure I've heard papa say so lots of times.

How She Caught Him.

"What would you do if you caught your husband flirting?"
"Why, my dear, that's just the way I did catch him!"

Between two evils choose neither. Between two goods choose both.—Edwards.

In the Line of Succession

By JOHN D. PARKER

There was once a king who had seven sons and seven daughters. The sons only had any chance of inheriting the crown, and there was but a slight chance for any of these except the crown prince doing so. As for the daughters, all the sons must die or otherwise be removed before even the oldest girl could be queen. Nevertheless the king insisted on all his sons and daughters taking mates of the blood royal.

Now, the youngest of the king's daughters, one day looking out through a window of the palace, saw a young baron caroling by on horseback and was struck by one of Cupid's shafts. Remembering that she could marry only a prince of the blood, straightway the injustice of the matter struck her. Being a fine scholar, with a taste for mathematics, she sat down and began to compute her chances of ever coming to the throne. After covering several yards of paper with figures she arrived at the conclusion that her chances of being a sovereign were but one in several millions. So she went to her father, with whom she was a great favorite, and, finding him in the council room, said:

"Papa, I have seen a young man, not of royal blood, but a baron, whom I wish to marry."

"No, my daughter," replied the king, "you cannot. You must marry a prince."

"Why is that necessary?" asked the girl.

"Why is it necessary? Why, because all your brothers and all your sisters might be removed and you would be queen. It is forbidden that a queen should have a husband not of the blood royal."

The princess sent for the papers containing her computations as to her chances of attaining the throne and laying them on the council table which, though ten feet long, was completely covered, invited her father to go over the figures with her that he might see what chance there was that the people would require her services to govern them. The king put on his spectacles and, leaning over the papers, began to study the calculations.

The princess had assumed there was one chance in five that her oldest brother, the heir apparent, would die and the crown would descend to the next male in line. The king admitted that there was scarcely one chance in five for that, since the crown prince was very strong and healthy, as, indeed, were all his children. Then the princess figured that the chances of the second oldest son dying, too, were greatly decreased. And in this way by a process of arithmetical progression she went on to figure the decrease of her chances of coming to the throne. The king took off his spectacles and wiped them with his royal handkerchief and said:

"These figures, my daughter, are based simply on the lives of your brothers and sisters. But some of them are married and have children who will inherit before you. Therefore if your chances, figured on the first basis, of coming to the throne are but one in several millions, on the second basis they would be only one in several billions or perhaps trillions. I think it may be safe for you to marry one not of royal blood, but there is a contingency you have not considered. Suppose there should come earthquake, war or pestilence that would sweep away our whole royal family except you. Then you would be queen, and a husband not of royal blood would be inadmissible."

The princess withdrew and in a month returned to her father's with eight strong men bearing a roll of paper on which she and fifty assistants had figured the chances of all the royal family being swept away by earthquake, war or pestilence, and placing the roll on the floor, they began to unroll it that the king might see the result of the calculation. But the king shrugged his shoulders and asked for the result. The princess told him that the chances against her becoming queen through earthquake war or pestilence were expressed by thirty-nine figures, which was beyond anything that could be expressed in words.

Then the king told her that she might marry the baron, and she was so happy that she fainted for joy.

Now, the king loved his daughter very much, though it required thirty-nine figures to express the chances against her succeeding him, and thinking that the young baron whom she loved was necessary to bring her to herself again, sent a messenger posthaste for him. When he came he was ushered into the presence of the princess, not knowing why he had been sent for.

Now, the princess, though bright at figures, was not equal to the task of telling a young man who had never seen her that she loved him and wished him to marry her. The consequence was that after trying for a long while to find a way out of the matter she dismissed him without telling him why he had been sent for.

Since she never found courage to declare her love the affair came to nothing. But it was fortunate that it did for during a naval review, at which all the royal family except the young son of the king's yacht it caught fire, and all were either burned to death or drowned.

The queen married a prince.

MILLET'S RIOT IN COLORS.

The Artist Enraged the Critics, but Forced Recognition.

In his early years as an artist the late Frank D. Millet had a hard struggle to gain recognition. He sent pictures to exhibitions, to be sure, and good pictures they were, but no one paid any particular attention to them or said anything about them.

One day Millet conceived an idea. He painted a picture of a lady in black sitting on a bright red sofa, standing against a vivid yellow background. The effect was just a trifle startling. Friends who saw it in the process of production expostulated with him and asked him what he was going to do with it. They were astounded when he announced that he was going to send it to the exhibition. They told him the critics would "wipe the floor" with him. "They can't do that without mentioning me," said Millet quietly, "and they've never even done that, as yet."

To the exhibition the picture went. It killed everything within twenty feet on either side of it. You couldn't help looking at it. It simply knocked you down and held you there.

The critics got into a towering passion over it. They wrote whole columns about it. They exhausted the English language in abusing it. They ridiculed the committee that permitted it to be hung. They had squibs and gibes about it, but every time they spoke of it they mentioned Frank Millet. He suddenly became the best known artist in town. Somebody, because of the stir it had made, bought the picture at a good price and removed it to the seclusion of his own home.

When the next exhibition came off Millet had another picture ready, one of a very different sort and very good, but no better than others which he had exhibited before. The critics had much to say about it and "noted with pleasure the marked improvement" that Mr. Millet had made, "an evidence," as they modestly put it, "of the value of criticism, even though severe, to a young artist." And the majority of them never realized that Millet had simply compelled their attention by a clever trick.

TUNIS DIVORCE COURT.

An Oriental Scene That Smacks of "The Arabian Nights."

The next time you happen to be in Tunis don't fail to pay a visit to the divorce court. It is the most Haroun-al-Raschidic institution this side of Samarkand. A great hall of justice, vaulted and floored with marble and strewn with eastern carpets, forms the setting, while husbands in turbans and lawyers in tarbooses, white veiled women and green robed, gray bearded judges complete a scene which might have been taken straight from "The Arabian Nights."

The women, closely veiled and hooded and herded like so many cattle within an iron grill, take no part in the proceedings which so intimately affect their futures, their interests being left in the hands of a voluble and gesticulative avocat. In each of the four sides of the great hall is an alcove, and in each alcove, seated cross-legged on a many cushioned divan, is a green robed, gold turbaned cavalier. To him the husband states his case, the wife, through her avocat, putting in her defense—if she has any.

The judge considers the facts in silence, gravely stroking his long gray beard the while, and then delivers his decision—in nine cases out of ten, so I was told, in favor of the husband. Should either party be dissatisfied with the finding he or she can take an appeal by the simple process of walking across the hall and laying their case before one of the other judges, whose decision is final.

A case, even if appealed, is generally disposed of well under an hour and at a total cost of $1.20.—Metropolitan Magazine.

Too Hasty.

A traveling theatrical company was starting to parade in a small New England town when a big gander from a farmyard near at hand waddled to the middle of the street and began to hiss.

One of the double-in-brass actors turned toward the fowl and angrily exclaimed:

"Don't be so quick to jump at conclusions. Wait till you see the show"—Lippincott's.

A Tight Fit.

"How do you like the rooms in your new flat?" asked Bill Brown. "Pretty fair," answered Jim Jones. "What do you mean by pretty fair?" "Well, they're a little tight across the shoulders, but otherwise seem to be a good fit."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Irony of Fate.

"Did your husband have luck on his shooting trip?" "The very worst. He accidentally shot the friend who was going to take us on an automobile tour and missed the man to whom he owed a lot of money."—Baltimore American.

Security.

"Did you lend that forgetful friend of yours the book he asked for?" "Yes, but I took care to borrow his umbrella the same day."—Washington Star.

WHAT AILS NANCY?

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.

Miss Nancy Lee was a maiden of forty and dwelt in the village of Charlotte. She was thirty years old when her parents died, and then she and her brother Ben kept house together for seven or eight years. Then he died, and Nancy was left alone in the world.

Miss Lee could have rented or sold her cottage and boarded, but she elected to be independent by continuing to occupy the place. It was a peaceful village, with nothing to make her afraid, and for several years things went on without a break. Then, all of a sudden, an aunt in a town thirty miles away was brought to her dying bed and sent for Nancy. The spinster was absent two weeks. She smoothed the pillow of the dying woman and brought home a feather bed and half a barrel of pickles. No one noticed anything strange about her until she had been home about a week. She fed her hens and swept her house as usual.

The first one to discover that Miss Nancy Lee was in trouble was Deacon Haskins. He called at the house one evening to borrow a rat trap, and he noticed that she was very nervous. She kept shrugging her shoulders and hitching about, and now and then her mouth would give a twitch at the corners. He solicitously inquired if she had stepped on a carpet tack, and she replied in the negative, and he went home to say to his wife:

"Prudence, Nancy Lee is acting very queer tonight."

"Good lands!"

"Hitched around all the time I was in the house."

"You don't say?"

"Acted as if she wanted to back up to a tree and rub."

"Deacon Haskins! I'll run right over! Maybe she's been taken with a spell."

"Oh, I guess it don't amount to anything. Been eating a green apple like as not. If she gets wuss she'll holler to us from the kitchen window."

The deacon's wife didn't go over, but early next morning Mrs. Partridge sent her son Willie over to borrow three eggs for breakfast. He got them, and he returned home with his eyes sticking out to exclaim:

"Ma, Miss Lee was crying when I went in!"

"Is it possible?"

"Yes; I caught her at it."

"Was she just crying or boo-hooing?"

"She was crying and rubbing her back agin the edge of a door."

"Heaven save us! I can understand that she might be crying over so many deaths in the family, but what on earth was she rubbing her back for?"

"It itched probably," replied her husband.

"It probably didn't do anything of the sort. There's a mystery here, and I'm going to try to get to the bottom of it."

After breakfast Mrs. Partridge made an excuse to drop in and see for herself. The spinster's eyes showed that she had been weeping. She also began to hitch about.

"You are like a cow in flytime. Nancy, I've known you for fifteen years, and if you are in trouble I want to help you out."

"But I'm not in trouble. One feels lonely once in awhile, and then the tears come."

"Yes; I know how it is, and I'm glad it's no worse for you. Run into my house any time. You know you're always welcome."

Miss Lee had denied things, but she hadn't fooled Mrs. Partridge a little bit. The caller left the house ostensibly for home, but slipped into the house of Mrs. Goodhue and greeted her with:

"Ruth Goodhue, there's something going on in this town!"

"Anybody's clothesline been robbed?"

"No, but Nancy Lee is crying and hitching around and rubbing her back on the edges of doors."

"But what ails her?"

"That's to be found out. That's the mystery. She says it ain't nothing 'tall, but of course we know better. We must make her tell."

"Yes, she's got to."

The two women started out and called on nine or ten other women, and before night Nancy Lee was the talk of the village. She had been crying and hitching and rubbing and yet had refused to explain. The good wife of Deacon Haskins had dropped in to borrow a nutmeg and then had made opportunity to say:

"Nancy, your mother and me used to play together as children. Why don't you tell me what ails you?"

"I—can't—tell!" was wailed out.

"Nancy Lee, are you in love?" was sternly asked.

"No."

"Have you been jilted?"

"No."

The deacon's wife stuck and hung, but the mystery was not to be solved—not that day. It was three days later when twenty-seven women, headed by the minister's wife, called and put the spinster through the third degree. Then the awful truth came out.

"Nancy lamed her back crying over her aunt," explained Mrs. Haskins to the deacon that evening. "She got a woman to put on a porous plaster for her, and when it began to—to—"

"Began to itch. I understand."

"She couldn't get at it to get it off."

"Humph! And that's what ailed Nancy!" sniffed the deacon as he wound up the clock and prepared for bed.

The Joys of the Editor

Most anyone can be an editor. All the editor has to do is to sit at a desk six days out of the week, four weeks of the month, and twelve months out of the year and "edit" such stuff as this.

"Mrs. Jones Cactus Creek let a can opener slip last week and cut herself in the pantry." "A mischievous lad of Picketown threw a stone and struck Mr. Pike in the alley last Thursday." "John Doe climbed on the roof of his house last week looking for a leak and fell striking himself on the back porch." "While Harold Green was escorting Miss Violet Wise from the church social last Saturday night a savage dog attacked them and bit Mr. Green several times on the public square." "Isaiah Trimer, of Running Creek, was playing with a cat Friday when it scratched him on the veranda." "Mr. Fong, while harnessing a broncho last Saturday, was kicked just south of his corn crib."—Exchange.

Senator Rayner is correct in speaking of "The Star-Spangled Banner" as the national anthem, which he did in his effort to get Fort McHenry preserved as an historical monument now that it is no longer valuable as a fortification. Senator Heyburn denies that it is the national anthem more than any other patriotic song, and while he does not name an official and authentic anthem he thinks "My Country 'Tis of Thee" is probably the one. The objection to this is that the air is that of "God Save the King." "The Star-Spangled Banner" is not very easy to sing, nor are the words even easy to commit to memory, but if Senator Heyburn will consult the military and naval authorities he will learn that it is at "The Star-Spangled Banner" that officers and men rise and uncover or otherwise salute.—Philadelphia Record.

It Cost Only $7200

To Discover America

Ledgers recently discovered at Palos, Spain, contain interesting facts concerning the outlay made by Christopher Columbus on his expedition to the New World.

The armament of the little fleet cost 14,000 pesetas. The personal expenses of Columbus and his officers were about 2000 pesetas, and six pesetas a month sufficed for the crew, so that 22,050 pesetas, or about $4400, was spent for the eight months that the voyage lasted. The sum total for the discovery of America, therefore, was 36,000 pesetas, or about $7200.

In spite of the small amount required, however, Queen Isabella was forced to pawn her jewels, it is related, to provide funds for the expedition.

American Gem Output

American mines in 1911 yielded $2,700 worth of diamonds, $9,500 worth of emeralds, $215,313 worth of sapphires, and $44,751 worth of turquoise according to figures just compiled by the United States Geological Survey. The total output of precious stones in the United States last year was valued at $343,692; the production in 1910 was valued at $295,380.

An important feature of the gem-mining industry in the United States during 1911 was the result of prospecting at the Turner emerald mine near Shelby, N. C. The quality of some of the gems and the value of the gem material found in this deposit with a small amount of development work are promising, for the output included gems valued at $100 to $200 per carat and equal in quality to the average run of the emeralds from South America. During the last three years this one locality in North Carolina has yielded gems worth $10,500.

Much interest has lately been aroused in the moss agates found in Montana, some of which are remarkable for their resemblance to landscapes. By taking advantage of the arrangement of the dark seams and dendritic patches, patterns are obtained that resemble moss, sea growth, ferns, rushes, trees, and landscapes with water and islands. The cut gems consist of stones suitable for use in brooches, stick pins, watch fobs, belt buckles and other ornaments. The gems cut from the Montana moss agate or mocha stone command good prices, bringing anywhere from $1 to $200 or $300 apiece. Some of the smaller stones suitable for stick pins, if the mossy or fernlike patterns are particularly delicate and beautiful, bring $25 each.

Most of American diamonds come from Arkansas and California, although accounts have appeared in newspapers of the discovery of these gems in Illinois and Texas. The most important find of the year in Arkansas was an 8 1/2 carat white diamond—the largest diamond so far found in the State. Another white diamond, of 3 1/4-64 carats, was also found.

The largest emerald so far discovered in North Carolina measures about 1 inch by 3/4 of an inch by half an inch. It was about half of a crystal split parallel with the length. This piece has been cut into 20 gems, the largest of which weighs about 8 carats. This stone has been described as having an excellent deep green color and as being particularly beautiful at night. It has almost no visible flaws but is slightly foggy in strong daylight.

Considerable business in gems is done among tourists along the coast of California and Oregon, the beach pebbles having peculiar textures, odd markings, and pleasing colors. Some of these stones have been described in terms suggested by characteristic features such as "onyxthyl," "flower stone," "wire agate," "fish egg," and "Japanese stone." One company in Avalon, Cal., has been engaged in cutting these stones for several years. The stone is obtained in all sizes, from cobbles over six inches thick to small pebbles, but good gem material is not plentiful. Beach pebbles are collected and cut for the tourist trade along the coast of Oregon, as in southern California. The tourists also collect these pebbles to carry off as souvenirs, either polished or in the rough.

A copy of the Survey's report on Gems and Precious Stones, 1911, by Douglas B. Sterrett, may be obtained free on application to the Director by the U. S. Geological Survey, Washington, D. C.

Sea Hues Are Varied

The blueness of sea water is in constant ratio to its saltiness. In the tropics the tremendous evaporation induced by the blazing sun causes the water to be much saltier than it is in higher latitudes. For about 30 degrees north and south of the equator the waters are of an exquisite azure. Beyond these latitudes the blue changes to green, and in the Arctic and Antarctic Oceans the greens are almost as vivid as the tropical blues.

The extraordinary blueness of the Mediterranean has two causes. Few large rivers of fresh water run into this sea, and, moreover, the Mediterranean is virtually landlocked and exposed to a powerful sun, so that evaporation is rapid. By actual test the waters of the Mediterranean are heavier and saltier than those of the Atlantic.

But blue and green are not the only colors observed in the sea. In January, 1909, a river of yellow water three miles wide was observed running parallel with the Gulf Stream. It stretched from Cape Florida to Cape Hatteras, and its color was undoubtedly due to some tremendous submarine upheaval, probably volcanic.

Again, nine years ago, the sea turned almost black off a large part of the California coast. The whole of Santa Cruz bay assumed this extraordinary inky hue, and fishing came abruptly to an end. The darkness seemed to have been caused by millions of the tiny animalcules known as whale food. The dull reddish tint that has given the Red Sea its name has a similar cause. The water becomes full of microscopic algae—tiny weeds.

The Yellow Sea, of China is usually supposed to owe its color to the flood of muddy water that its great river pours into it. But there again living organisms are responsible for the peculiar tint.

Occasionally, for some cause yet undiscovered, great areas of the ocean turn milk white. In March, 1904, a Japanese merchant vessel, steaming at night between Hong Kong and Yokohama, ran into a snow white sea. It was not an opaque phosphorescent surface, but an expanse of pure snow white that dazzled the eyes. The phenomenon lasted for six hours. —Marine Journal.

An Official Story Teller

The Boston Public Library has an official "story teller." She is not a member of Mr. Roosevelt's Ananias Club, but one who is employed to entertain and instruct children. Mrs. Mary A. Cronan, the official in question, has found her work so popular that it attracts a great multitude of children and takes her entire time. The children are in classes and each class has a period each week assigned to it. Mrs. Cronan condenses novels such as "Oliver Twist" and "Romola" and tells the story. The younger ones are entertained with the old fairy tales and Uncle Remus.

Story telling is a great art. It is more rare than acting, because it requires all the qualities of the actor without the aid of the theatre accessories. Nothing is better calculated to educate children and impart to them the love of books and reading than good story telling.

Mrs. Cronan began her work a year ago, and the Boston papers claim that she is the first and original official story teller. But we are under the impression that long before Mrs. Cronan began her work in the Boston library there was an official story teller in the Washington County Free Library at Hagerstown, Md. In that excellent library there is a room for children in which are placed children's books, and a librarian especially selected for the work is in charge. It is our belief that this librarian is an official story teller like the one in the Boston library. —Baltimore Sun.

The Alaskan Volcanic

Disturbance Beneficial

Permanent alteration in the climate of the Alaskan Coast through shifting of warm ocean currents, by lifting of the sea bottom, the opening of the fishing banks of unestimated value, and the eventual closing of Berings Straits, owing also to a rise in the floor of the sea, are among the scientific probabilities now being discussed in connection with the investigation of the eruption of Mount Katmai a month ago.

Various geological parties and men from several revenue cutters are exploring the bottom of the sea to determine how far submarine geography has been changed. So far as the earth's surface is concerned the eruption was beneficial, the volcanic ash having already stimulated plant growth.

Geologists assert that the tops of submerged mountains which form the Aleutian Isles are rising steadily through pressure on the sea bottom from enormous amount of sediment, and, after eventually cutting off Bering Sea, will continue to rise until what is now the sea will be replaced by a great sweep of land. A large number of scientists sailed from Seattle Tuesday for Seward, there to take passage for Kodiak.

OYSTER CULTURE ON THE INCREASE

Chairman Green Says Prejudice Among Natural Bar Oyster- men is Dying Out

That oyster culture has at last come into its own in Maryland, after two generations of the State's fishermen have held it impracticable, objectionable and an effort to infringe upon their inalienable rights, was the emphatic opinion expressed last Thursday by Mr. Benjamin K. Green, chairman of the Maryland Shellfish Commission.

Mr. Green was in the offices of the commission in the National Marine Bank Building, on South Gay street, Baltimore. With him were Commissioners Maltbie and Revell, appointed last spring by Governor Goldsborough. Mr. Green, reappointed by the Governor, was a member of the original board created in 1906 under the Haman Oyster Culture law. His colleagues, succeeded by Messrs. Maltbie and Revell, were Walter H. Mitchell and Dr. Caswell Grave.

The commission Thursday held a meeting, at which the recent increase in application for oyster ground leases were among the chief objects of discussion.

"It is my firm belief," said Mr. Green, "that by next winter the commission will have leased in the bay and its tributaries at least 5,000 acres of bottom for the purpose of planting and cultivating oysters. Already we have applications for about 3,000 acres, and are expecting daily applications from a group of Baltimore business men for 2,000 acres additional, to be taken up in 500-acre lots in the bay. That would make my predicted 5,000 acre total. By the time these acreages were really leased, however, it would be late in the fall, for after each application there comes a great deal of work, chief among which is the surveying of the areas called for.

"We are now on the high road to success under the recently enacted Campbell-Price law, which allows the cultivating of oysters under reasonable restrictions. Before this law was passed, however, oyster culture could not be established as an industry, for the restrictions of the Haman law discouraged would-be planters. As proof of this I might state that at the end of the six years in which the Haman law was in force only about 1,400 acres had been leased.

"I believe that the prejudice against oyster culture, formerly held by natural bar oystermen, is fast dying out, and that in the end these will be among the planters."

Death of Frank Covington

Mr. Frank Covington died at the Washington Hotel, where he had been stopping for some time, Monday night of last week, aged sixty years.

Mr. Covington was a son of the late Isaac and Elizabeth Covington, of Somerset county. He removed from Princess Anne to Norfolk, Virginia, and was engaged in business there until two years ago when he returned to Princess Anne on account of poor health.

Funeral services were held on Tuesday afternoon, in St. Andrew's Protestant Episcopal Church, conducted by the Rev. C. H. Weaver, and the interment was in the churchyard adjoining. The pall bearers were: Messrs. J. D. Wallop, I. T. James Brown, Omar A. Jones, Wm. T. G. Polk, Henry J. Waters and John W. Morris.

Sons of America Convention

The State camp, Patriotic Order Sons of America, will hold its annual convention in Chestertown, August 14th and 15th. The delegates from Baltimore and other parts of the State to the number of 250 are expected to attend. The local camp is preparing a royal entertainment for visitors and merchants and residents are decorating.

From 1,500 to 2,000 people are expected to be present on Wednesday evening, the 14th, when the State and local Patriotic Order Sons of America will parade the town. The parade will be in three divisions—the pedestrians, horsemen and horsewomen and the automobileists.

A brass band of not fewer than 15 pieces will play and a choir of 25 or 30 ladies and gentlemen will sing national and State airs.

New Steel Tower and Water Tank

Last Friday the Commissioners of Princess Anne closed a contract with the Chicago Bridge and Iron Works, of New York, for a steel tower and tank having a capacity of 75,000 gallons to increase the water supply for the town. The new tank will be 75 feet high to the balcony, including steel roof, balcony, ladders, 6 inch riser pipe, foot elbow, two-ply frost casings and erected on a concrete foundation.

The work is to be all completed and ready for use on or before November 25th, 1912, and will cost $5,570.00.

WHEN WILSON AND TAFT MEET

Both Have Consented to Make Addresses at The American Road Congress

The first campaign meeting of Governor Wilson, of New Jersey, and President Taft is to take place at Atlantic City at the American Road Congress between September 30 and October 5. The respective candidates of the Democratic and Republican parties have both consented to address the American Road Congress, and while the addresses of the two men will be non-political, there is great interest in the manner in which they will greet each other. It is not probable that they will have another chance in the course of the campaign to appear upon the same platform. Both candidates are looking forward to the truce that will prevail at the big road congress.

Both the President and Governor Wilson agreed to address the American Road Congress before they were nominated by their respective parties. Of all the candidates who were in the Republican and Democratic fields before the conventions were held Wilson and Taft were the only two invited to address the Road Congress. The directors of the congress are priding themselves upon having picked the winners.

The American Road Congress marks the combination of the conventions of the American Associations for Highway Improvement, the American Automobile Association and the National Association of Road Machinery and Material Manufacturers. It will be the first time that every faction engaged in the road movement has combined in one general congress. More than a half hundred state, county and local associations which are affiliated with the American Association for Highway Improvement will be represented at the congress, and automobile tours to Atlantic City from all sections of the country are being arranged by the American Automobile Association. Eighty thousand square feet of space have been set aside for the exhibits, nearly one-half of which has already been engaged by leading manufacturers.

Postmasters at Ocean City

The fifth annual convention of the Maryland State League of Postmasters met at Ocean City Thursday, in the Atlantic Auditorium. The convention was called to order by President George E. Lane, and the address of welcome was delivered by Judge Booth. C. A. Stillings addressed the meeting on practical organization work. Congressman J. Harry Covington also addressed the convention. Chas. L. Clarkson, superintendent of the money order division, Baltimore, spoke on Thursday, and followed J. A. Fitzgerald, superintendent of the Second District National League of Postmasters, Carter B. Keene and Geo. E. Lane. About 200, including members and their families, were present.

On Friday the following officers were elected: President, George E. Lane, of Queenstown; vice president, Dr. C. W. Famous, of Street; secretary, Charles E. Myers, of Greentwood; treasurer, Robert S. McKinney, of Taneytown. George E. Lane, president, was elected as delegate to the national convention, which meets at Richmond, Va. September 20th and 21st.

John H. Costen Dead

The remains of Mr. John Humphreys Costen, who died in Philadelphia, Sunday, July 21st, were brought to Princess Anne for burial.

Funeral services were held in Antioch Methodist Episcopal Church Tuesday afternoon, conducted by the pastor, Rev. J. Howard Gray, and the interment was in the churchyard adjoining.

Mr. Costen was 43 years old and a native of Somerset county, but had been residing in Philadelphia for several years. He is survived by a widow and one son. The pallbearers were his three brothers, Messrs. W. Brice and Isaac Costen, of Clarksburg, W. Va.; Samuel S. Costen, of Hampton, Va.; E. Herrman Cohn, of Princess Anne, and Wm. C. Brown and Harry Donahoe, of Philadelphia.

To Improve State Capitol

Governor Goldsborough is taking a keen interest in the proposed repairs to the State buildings at Annapolis, provision for which was made by an act of the late Legislature. Last Wednesday the Governor made an inspection with Mr. Mottu, the Baltimore architect. An elevator is one of the proposed improvements. It will be near the main stairway. The exterior of the Capitol building will be cleaned and painted.

NOTED CHURCHMAN HAS PASSED AWAY

Bishop Henry W. Warren of the Methodist Church Died Tuesday Night

Bishop Henry W. Warren, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who was retired from active work by the General Conference last May, died at Denver, Col., Tuesday night. He was stricken with pneumonia a few days previous. He was of New England stock, having been born in Williamsburgh, Mass., in 1831. He graduated from Wesleyan University in 1853, and for two years after graduation taught the ancient languages at Wilbraham Seminary. In 1855 he became a member of the Wilbraham Conference.

After 16 years of service there he was transferred in 1871 to the Philadelphia Conference, and three years later to the New York East Conference. He was made a bishop in 1880. His home was in Denver. He was widely known as an extensive traveler and had a proud reputation as a mountain climber, was most popular on the lecture platform and he was an astronomical authority.

He was a member of the editorial staff of the Sunday School Times, and aside from his works on astronomy wrote numerous other works on different topics. His church sent him to European conferences and favored him with many other honors which his talents deserved. Ever since 1862 he was editorial correspondent for the Christian Advocate. He was also the author of many articles in the Methodist Quarterly Review.

Hospital Site Chosen

The site for the new Eastern Shore State Hospital for the Insane has been selected. It is the home farm of Thomas Henry Kirwan, two miles from Cambridge. The farm lies between the Cambridge-Hurlock state road and the Chop tank river. It consists of 225 acres.

There is waterfront on the Choptank river, with a fine sandy beach and a 30-foot embankment, giving a delightful view of the river. Connection with the Cambridge and Seaford branch of the Pennsylvania Railroad will be easy.

The price stipulated is $25,000. In this there is no brokerage, for the commission committee bought direct from the owners. The price is considered very reasonable and the location ideal by the people of this section. The contract will be submitted at once to the Hospital Commission for formal ratification. The site committee that closed the contract with Mr. Kirwan consists of Governor Goldsborough, Comptroller Harrington and Senator J. Hooper Bosley.

Two Hundred Hurt

Two hundred Masons, attending a Masonic picnic, and their families, seated on the wooden platforms covering a 25-foot ravine in front of the open-air theater at Wheeling, W. Va., were mangled and badly injured at 4.30 last Friday afternoon when the platform broke in the center and they were violently thrown and crushed into the bottom of the V-shaped breach at the bottom of the ravine. Doctors were rushed to the scene of the accident and the injured were hauled out by rescue parties with stout ropes and placed in the pavilion. Every person crowded on the platform listening to the lectures and speeches from the stage went to the bottom. All were injured more or less. Numerous persons suffered broken bones, serious body injuries, cuts and gashes.

Death of Hance M. Dashiell

Mr. Hance M. Dashiell died at an early hour last Sunday morning at the home of his father, Mr. Cadamus Dashiell, near the "Red Bridge," of consumption.

Mr. Dashiell was in the 26th year of his age and had been in poor health for the past two years. He is survived by a widow (who is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Dyer, formerly of Princess Anne, but now of Denton, Md.) and a little daughter.

Funeral services will be held this (Tuesday) afternoon at Antioch Methodist Episcopal Church, conducted by Rev. J. Howard Gray and Rev. W. F. Freund, and interment will be in the Manokin Presbyterian cemetery.

Mr. Dashiell was well known not only in Princess Anne but also elsewhere, having for ten years past been in the employ of J. T. Taylor, Jr., of this town.

—Don't forget the Red Men's celebration, which will take place in Snow Hill on Wednesday, August 14th, 1912. This promises to be a grand affair, and will, no doubt, be largely attended.

—Many a man has tripped over his own bluff.

ROOSEVELT MEN NEAR A SPLIT

Third Party Asked by Some Con- ventioners and Fought By Others

The most definite action of the "Bull Moose" convention last Thursday at the Empire Theatre, Baltimore, was its approval of Colonel Theodore Roosevelt as a candidate for President. All other acts of the convention were more or less hazy.

The convention selected 16 delegates with half a vote each and a like number of alternates to the national Progressive convention, at Chicago, August 5th. The majority of the leading Roosevelt men of the State were conspicuous by their absence. Chas. J. Bonaparte sent a letter, as also did Geo. R. Gaither. Gist Blair is in Europe and will not even be able to attend the Chicago convention. Judge Motter was attending to his duties at Frederick and former Senator Wellington is ill at Deer Park.

A committee was appointed to name a set of electors to go on the Roosevelt ticket in the fall, but there was a string to the resolution which named the committee. This will give the Roosevelt people a loophole to form a combination with the Taft forces on electors, if the Chicago convention should approve of such a move.

John W. Rich, a colored employee of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, tried to have the convention go on record as favoring "equal civil and political rights" for the negroes, but after juggling the resolution for a half hour in an attempt to find out what to do with it the convention referred it to the Maryland delegation to Chicago.

While the passage of the resolution approving a separate set of electors was carried by a large majority, the Rich resolution was sidetracked because its preamble was alleged to commit the Maryland convention to the formation of a third party, and this the convention, by a vote on the Rich resolution, said it did not want to do.

Thus the third party question still open and a split is threatened in the "Bull Moose" ranks. E. C. Carrington, Jr., and some others of the Progressive Republican leaders in Maryland want to put the candidacy of Roosevelt forward in such a way that both Democrats and Republicans can vote for him. Letters from Messrs. Bonaparte and Gaither which were read said this should be made plain—that a man who voted for Roosevelt was not deserting his own party or forming a new one and that the question of whether a new party was to be formed depended upon what happened in November.

In opposition to this view is the faction led by Col. Joseph R. Baldwin, of Harford county, who wants a complete break and entirely new party. Politicians in the "Bull Moose" camp say that more flies can be caught with molasses than with vinegar, and that the less said about a new party just now the better. While they think they can get a great many to vote for Roosevelt as an independent, they do not think the "third party" cry will help him.

Pocomoke's New Postoffice

The new postoffice at Pocomoke City was formally opened the first of last week. Postmaster H. Clay Powell entered upon his duties about two years ago, and in less than a month thereafter set out to have an up-to-date office, and as the result of his untiring efforts Uncle Sam has a place of business of which he may feel proud. The new outfit consists of 175 square feet of floor space, 400 combination lock boxes and separate departments for register, money order and postal savings. The old office had been in existence for nearly 25 years and was a fourth-class office, and had become antiquated. Now it is a second-class office. Heretofore the office closed at 9 o'clock p. m. Hereafter it will be open day and night.

Robbers Get Mail

Robbers who have been active in Seaford for the last two weeks entered the Hotel Sussex shortly before 12 o'clock Tuesday and stole nearly 100 letters and packages, which were to have been mailed on the midnight trains.

Immediately after the theft was discovered, Night Clerk John Boswell summoned Night Watchmen Lankford and Williams, who searched several suspicious young men who had been loitering in the hotel lobby, but no trace of the missing parcels could be found.

The letters are said to have contained large sums of money, checks and other valuable papers. The postal authorities have been notified.

GOVERNOR SIGNS CORRECT TAX BILL

Makes Another Effort To Avoid Extra Session of General Assembly

Hoping thereby to cure the defects discovered in the enrolled copy of the State tax-rate bill, which he signed a few days after the adjournment of the last Legislature, Governor Goldsborough, in another effort to avoid the necessity for calling an extra session of the General Assembly, last Thursday affixed his signature to the original bill as it was passed by both branches free of errors. The signing was done in accordance with the law, in the presence of the President and Secretary of the Senate and the Speaker and Chief Clerk of the House.

The Governor is firmly convinced of his right to substitute the errorless original bill for the enrolled copy thereof, which contained so many mistakes that it was rendered practically useless. When asked if he was at all sure of contentment that he can thus nullify one measure, even though defective, by signing the bill which it was intended he should sign, he replied that he was.

"I am sure I am doing the right thing," said the Governor. "There is no question whatever in my mind on that point. The original bill is the one that was intended to be signed. It was never intended that I should sign a measure entirely different from the original. Therefore, I am convinced that I am doing what is right."

But despite the Governor's faith in the ground upon which he is standing, there are a number of lawyers in Baltimore who do not agree with him. These take the view that once a bill is signed in proper manner it becomes the law until another Legislature nullifies it. Hence they contend that if the question is raised the Governor may yet be forced to call the General Assembly into extraordinary session in order to cure the defect that makes the enrolled copy of the tax rate bill a valueless piece of legislation.

Hicks' Forecast for August

A regular storm period is central on the 1st, covering July 30th to August 4th. By the 2d, the barometer will fall to marked storm conditions in western and central regions, the temperature will rise to great warmth, and storms of lightning, thunder, wind and rain will break into very violent gusts and gales in many localities, as the general storm area passes eastwardly across the country. The Venus influence will be strong at this time, and vicious electrical storms, with hail in northwestern to northern regions, will be followed by sudden changes to unseasonably cool for two or three days.

A reactionary storm period has its central days on the 7th, 8th and 9th. At this time the thermometer will again rise to very high temperatures, the barometer will fall, and black, threatening storm clouds, with probability of violence, will pass from west to east over the country. Great bluster and threatening thunder may be looked for, but rains will probably not prove as copious and general as needed. Another break in the temperature will give temporary respite from summer heat about 9th, 10th and 11th.

A regular storm period embraces the 11th to 16th, central on the 13th. The moon is new and in perigee on the 12th and on the celestial equator on the 15th. The center of the Venus period is on the 13th, coincident with the center of this Vulcan period. The autumnal equinox of the earth is also present at this time. Look for marked fall of the barometer in western parts by the 12th, and during the 13th, 14th, 15th and 16th, violent storms of rain, wind and thunder.

A reactionary storm period has its central days on the 18th, 19th and 20th.

A regular storm period covers the 23d to 27th, central on the 24th. Moon in apogee on the 25th and full on the 27th. The center of a Mercury period is on the 25th. Another seismic period involves the 24th to 30th, centering on the 27th. The general disturbances at this time promise to be aggravated and prolonged into the reactionary storm period, central on the 29th, 30th and 31st. The moon passes over the celestial equator on the 29th, near its full. The autumnal equinox of the earth will also bear heavily on the period, the Jupiter the Venus and the Mercury periods adding their forces to the strong combination. August promises to go out with storm and threatening weather generally, passing eastwardly over the country. Change to much cooler, and possibly frost northward will attend high barometer at close of the month.

DEATH AND DESOLATION THIRTEEN DIE IN A MINE

Southwest Counties of Pennsylv- ania Swept by Cloudbursts and Great Floods

Caught like rats in a trap when water rushed into the manway of Superba No. 2 Mines, at Evans Station, three miles north of Uniontown, Penna., last Wednesday afternoon, following a cloudburst, 13 men were drowned and 27 escaped after a most harrowing experience. The men were drowned about 4,000 feet from the mouth of the mines, their only avenue of escape.

The majority of the victims had large families, and about 30 children are deprived of their breadwinners by one of the worst catastrophes that has ever visited Fayette county.

The men who escaped were forced to half swim and half walk to the pit mouth through water ranging in depth from their waists to their necks on their way to safety. The majority of the miners who escaped were knocked down by timbers that were sent down the mine with great velocity in the raging current. Several men were being carried back into the mine to certain death when rescued by their companions who risked their lives.

It was stated by officials of the Superba Company that it will take at least 60 days to clear the mine of water and until that time bodies must remain in the water in which they perished. Superintendent J. Buttermore was the first man to see the high water start in the manway. He raised the alarm and all the men on the outside rushed into the mine yelling as the went. In that manner more than half of the miners were saved.

Death and desolation spread broadcast over the southwest counties of Pennsylvania Wednesday afternoon and that night through cloudbursts and overflowing streams. It was in the coke region that the storm was most furious. Uniontown, Dunbar, Lemont, Mt. Braddock and Connellsville were inundated, and suffered great damage.

The Turtle Creek Valley was visited by a disastrous flood, and the damage is enormous. Crops were blotted from the earth. Railroad traffic through a great territory was demoralized. With four connections into Uniontown, the Pennsylvania railroad was unable to get passengers into the city early Thursday. Several railroad bridges of that system and the Baltimore & Ohio were torn from foundations thought impregnable and hurled into the maddened waters. Hundreds are homeless, and thousands are suffering. Towns were cut off from railroad, mail, telephone and telegraph connections.

Floods in these regions are of annual occurrence, for which preparation is made, and comparatively little damage is done. Freshets caused by heavy summer rains occur several times a season, but the heavy waterfalls are carried away with but little damage. The cloudbursts Wednesday, however, came before the district had recovered from 24 hours of torrential rain on Sunday, and with every stream bank full soon all were out of their banks. As the water receded Thursday morning a stricken community gazed aghast at the power of the elements. Heavy rocks had been split, heavy railroad iron had been lifted from almost solid beds and dropped into rivers, and on all sides deep scars marked the surface of the earth where the crowding water had made new courses.

New Eastern Shore Service

With the construction of its wharf at the foot of King George street, Annapolis, now complete and two additional boats commissioned and ready for service, the Eastern Shore Development Steamship Company, which operates between points on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, with Annapolis as the connecting point for Baltimore and Washington, will open its freight traffic service this week.

The company has been engaged in the passenger traffic for the last two or three months, and the business has been fairly favorable. The passenger-carrying vessels are the steamers Atlantic and Texas. The boats for handling freight are of gasoline power.

The company's boats connect at Claiborne, Cambridge and Oxford for all points along the Eastern Shore, and with the Annapolis connection by trolley, with the Washington, Baltimore and Annapolis Electric Line, it means a saving of at least three hours in reaching Baltimore and Washington.

With the institution of the freight service, it will be particularly convenient to the farmers of the Eastern Shore in getting their produce to the markets of either of the cities.

Children Cry FOR FLETCHER'S CASTORIA

"Then let them up at once! Do you hear? At once!" And as he began to unlock the door, walked off. After that, her interest in the rock waned; the Mount seemed but a prison; she, herself, desired only to escape from it.

"Have my saddle put on Saladin," she said to Beppo the next day, toward the end of a long afternoon. "Very well, my lady. Who accompanies your ladyship?"

"No one!" With slight emphasis. "I ride alone."

Beppo discreetly suppressed his surprise. "Is your ladyship going far? If so, I beg to remind that tonight is the change of the moon, and the 'grand,' not the 'little' tide may be coming in."

"I was already aware of it, and shall keep between the Mount and the shore. Have my horse sent to the upper gate," she added, and soon afterward rode down.

The town was astir, and many looked after her as she passed; not kindly, but with the varying expressions she had of late begun to notice. Again was she cognizant of that feeling of secret antagonism, even from these people whose houses clung to the very foundations of her own abode, and her lips set tightly. Why did they hate her? What right had they to hate her? A sensation, almost of relief, came over her, when passing through the massive, feudal gate, she found herself on the beach.

Still and languorous was the day; not a breath stirred above the tiny ripples of the sand; a calm, almost unnatural, seemed to wrap the world in its embrace. The girl breathed deeper, feeling the closeness of the air; her impatient eyes looked around; scanned the shore; to the left, low and flat—to the right, marked by the dark fringe of a forest. Which way should she go? Irresolutely she turned in the direction of the wood.

Saladin, her horse, seemed in unusually fine fettle, and the distance separating her from the land was soon covered; but still she continued to follow the shore, swinging around and out toward a point some distance seaward. Not until she had reached that extreme projection of land, where the woeful green crept out from the forest as far as it might, did she draw rein. Saladin stopped, albeit with protest, tossing his great head.

"You might as well make an end of that, sir!" said the girl, and, springing from the saddle, deftly secured him. Then turning her back toward the Mount, a shadowy pyramid in the distance, she seated herself in the grass with her eyes to the woods.

Not long, however, did my lady remain thus; soon rising, she walked toward the shadowy depths. At the verge she paused; her brows grew thoughtful; what was it the woods recalled? Suddenly, she remembered—a boy she had met the night she left for school so long ago, had told her he lived in them. She recalled, too, as a child, how the woman, Marie, who had been maid to her mother, had tried to frighten her about that sequestered domain, with tales of fierce wild animals and unearthly creatures, visible and invisible, that roamed within.

She had no fear now, though faint rustlings and a pulsation of sound held her listening. Then, through the leafy interstice, a gleaming and flashing, as if some one were throwing jewels to the earth, lured her on to the cause of the seeming enchantment—a tiny waterfall!

The moment passed; still she lingered. Around the Mount's high top, her own home, only transcendent silence reigned; here was she surrounded by babbling voices and all manner of merry creatures—lively little squirrels; winged insects, romping in the twilight shade; a portly and well-satisfied appearing green monster who regarded her amicably from a niche of green. A butterfly, poised and waving its wings, held her a long time—until she was suddenly aroused by the wood growing darker. Raising her eyes, she saw through the green foliage overhead that the bright sky had become sunless. At the same time a rumbling detonation, faint, far-off, broke in upon the whisperings and tinklings of that wood noon. Getting up, she stood for a moment listening; then walked away.

Near the verge of the sand, Saladin greeted her with impatience, tossing his head toward the darkening heavens. Nor did he wait until she was fairly seated before starting back at a rapid gallop along the shore. But the girl uttered no protest; her face was set in a grimace. A little wild creature, as became one of rugged ancestry, but never vicious, only headstrong! And she didn't mind that—

Already had he begun to slack that first thundering pace when something white—a veil, perhaps, dropped from the cavalcade of lords and ladies some days before on the land and waited to the beach—fluttered like a live thing suddenly before him. In his tense mood, Saladin, affrighted, sprang to one side; then wheeling outright, madly took the bit in his teeth. Perforce his mistress resigned herself, sitting straight and sure, with little hands hard and firm at the reins. Saladin was behaving very badly, but—at least he was superb, worth conquering, if—

A brief thrill of apprehension seized her as, again drawing near the point of land, he showed no signs of yielding, resisted all her attempts to turn, to direct him to it. With nostrils thrust forward and breathing strong, he continued to choose his own course; to whirl her on; past the promontory; around into the great bay beyond—now a vast expanse, or desert of sand, broken only, about halfway across, by the small isle of Casque. Toward this rocky formation, a pygmy to the great Mount from which it lay concealed by the intervening projection of land, the horse rushed.

On, on! In vain she still endeavored to stop him; thinking uneasily of stories the fishermen told of this neighboring coast; of the sands that often shifted here, setting pitfalls for the unwary. She saw the sky grow yet darker, noted the nearer flashings of light, and heard the louder rumblings that followed. Then presently another danger she had long been conscious of, on a sudden became real.

She saw, or thought she saw, a faint streak, like a silver line drawn across the sky where the yellow sands touched the somber horizon. And Saladin seemed to observe it, too; to detect in it cause for wonder; reason for hesitation. At any rate, that headlong speed now showed signs of diminishing; he clipped and tossed the sand less vigorously, and looked around at his mistress with wild, uneasy eyes. Again she spoke to him; pulled with all her strength at the reins, and at once, he stopped.

None too soon! Great drops of rain had begun to fall, but the girl did not notice them. The white line alone riveted her attention! It seemed to grow broader; to acquire an intangible movement of its own; at the same time to give out a sound—a strange, low droning that filled the air. Heard for the first time, a stranger at the Mount would have found it inexplicable; to the Governor's daughter, the menacing cadence left no room for doubt as to its origin.

The girl's cheek paled; her gaze swung in the opposite direction, toward the point of land, now so distant. Could they reach it? She did not believe they could; indeed, the "grand" tide coming up behind on the verge of the storm, faster than any horse could gallop, would overtake them midway. And Saladin seemed to know it also; beneath her, he trembled. Yet must they try, she thought, and had tightened the reins to turn, when looking ahead once more, she discerned a break in the forbidding cliffs of the little island of Casque, and, back of the fissure, a shining spot which marked a tiny cove.

A moment she hesitated; what should she do? Ride toward the isle and the white danger, or toward the point of mainland and from it? Either alternative was a desperate one, but the isle lay much nearer; and quickly, the brown eyes gleaming with sudden courage, she decided; touched her horse and pressed him forward.

But fast as she went the "grand" tide came faster; struck with a loud, menacing sound the seaward side of the isle and swung hungrily around. My lady cast over her shoulder a quick glance; the cove, however, was near; only a line of small rocks, jutting from the sand, separated her from it. If they could but pass, she thought; they had passed, she told herself joyfully, when of a sudden the horse stumbled; fell. Thrown violently from his back, a moment was she cognizant of a deafening roar; a riotous advance of foam; above, a hundred birds that screamed distractedly; then all these sounds mingled; darkness succeeded, and she remembered no more.

CHAPTER VIII.

The Old Watch-Tower.

A wall! A window—a prison-like interior! As her eyes opened, the Governor's daughter strove confusedly to decipher her surroundings. The wall seemed real; the narrow window, too, high above, framing, against a darkening background, a slant of fine rain! Again she closed her eyes, only to be conscious of a gentle languor; a heaviness like that of half-sleep; of bodily heat, and also a little bodily pain. For an indefinite period, really a moment or two, she resigned herself to that dreamy torpor; then, with an effort, lifted her lashes once more.

As she gazed before her, something bright seemed leaping back and forth; a flame—that played on the wall; revealing the joints between the stones of massive masonry; casting shadows, but to wipe them out; palling near a small window, the only aperture apparent in the cell-like place. Turning from the flickerings, her glance quickly sought their source—a fire in a hearth, before which she lay—or half-sat, propped against a stone.

But why? The spot was strange; in her ears sounded a buzzing, like the murmur of a waterfall. She remembered now; she had lingered before one—in the woods; and Saladin had run away, madly, across the sands, until—my lady raised her hand to her brow; abruptly let it fall. In the shadow on the other side of the hearth some one moved; some one who had been watching her and who now stepped out into the light.

"Are you better?" said a voice. She stared. On the bold, swarthy features of a young man now standing and looking down at her, the light flared and gleamed; the open shirt revealed a muscular throat; the downturned black eyes were steady, solicitous. His appearance was unexpected, yet not quite strange; she had seen him before, but, in the general surprise and perplexity of the moment, did not ask herself where. The interval between what she last remembered on the beach—the rush and swirl of water—and what she woke to, absorbed the hazy workings of her mind.

The young man stopped; stirred the fire, and after a pause, apparently to give her time to collect her thoughts, repeated his question: "Are you better, now?"

"Oh, yes," she said, with an effort, half sitting up. And then irrelevantly,

"At Times—a Hunter."

with rather a wild glance about her: "Isn't—Isn't it storming outside?"

"A little—not much—" A smile crossed the dark features. "I remember," she added, as if forcing herself to speak, "it had just begun to rain on the beach, when it—the 'grand' tide—" The words died away; mechanically she lifted her hand, brushed back the shining waves of hair.

"Why think of it now?" he interposed gently. "But," uncertainly she smoothed her skirt; it was damp and warm; "I suppose this is the island of Casque?"

"Yes."

"And this place?"

"The old watch-tower."

"But how—" Then she noticed that his hands, long, brown and well-formed, were cut and bruised; bore many jagged marks as from a fierce struggle. "How did you hurt your hands?"

He thrust them into his pockets. "Was it from the rocks—and the waves? How did I get here?"

"Oh, I was standing on the cliff," he answered carelessly—"and—saw your horse running away!"

"You did? And then—came down?"

"What else was there to do?" he said simply.

Her gaze returned to the fire. "But the tide was rushing in—rushing! It was right upon me!"

She looked again toward the pockets into which his hands were thrust; observed his shirt, torn at the shoulder; then arose unsteadily. "I know—it was not so easy!" she said. "It was brave of you—"

"Your Ladyship is no coward!" he interrupted, a sparkle in his eyes. "When you turned the horse toward the tide, I was watching; hoping you would dare, and you did!"

About to reply, she became once more aware she was still very dizzy from the fall on the sand; the shapely figure swayed and she put out her hand with a gesture of helplessness. At the same time, the man reached forward quickly and caught her. A moment was she conscious of a firm grasp; a dark, anxious gaze bent upon her; then, slid gently back to the stone seat.

A brief interval, and gradually she began to see again more distinctly—a man's face, not far from hers; a face that drew back as her own look cleared. At a respectful distance he now stood, his bearing at once erect and buoyant, and more curiously she regarded him. A distinct type, here pride and intelligence stamped themselves strongly on the dark, handsome features; courage and daring were written on the bold, self-reliant brow. And with this realization of something distinctive, compelling, in his personality, came another.

"I have seen you—spoken with you before! On the beach—the night of the dance!"

The young man turned. "Your Ladyship so far honored me—as to dance with me!" he said, in his eyes a touch of that brightness that had caused her to regard him imperiously, as he had swung her to the measure of the music, on the occasion in question.

"Started to!" She corrected him, straightening suddenly at the recollection of that evening, when humility and modesty were virtues conspicuously wanting in his demeanor.

"Your Ladyship is right," he said quietly. "An alarm from the Mount interrupted."

She glanced at him quickly. His eyes met hers with a look of unconcern.

"Are you—a fisherman?" she asked abruptly.

"On occasions."

"And when you are not one—what are you then?"

"At times—a hunter."

"Ah!" Her eye lingered on something bright on the ledge beneath the window. "And that is the reason you have—pistols?"

"Exactly, my Lady!"

She continued to regard the weapons, of finest workmanship, inlaid with a metal that gleamed dully, like gold, in the light from the fire. His glance followed hers; she was about to speak, when quickly he interrupted.

"Has your Ladyship thought how she is going to get back to the Mount?"

My lady's questioning, along the line of personal inquiry, ceased; the Governor's daughter looked a little blank. "No—that is, haven't you a boat?"

"Not here."

"Then you walked over?"

He neither affirmed, nor denied.

"And the tide will not be out for hours!" Her look showed consternation; she glanced toward the opening in the wall. "Isn't it becoming dark now?"

"Yes, my Lady."

"Of course, it was almost sundown when—But I must return at once! Don't you understand?"

He regarded her silently; the beautiful, impatient eyes; the slim, white fingers that tapped restlessly, one against another. "I will do what I can!" he said at last slowly.

"But what?" she demanded. "What can you do?"

He did not answer; my lady made a gesture. "How ridiculous! A prisoner on an island!"

"There may be a way," he began.

"My horse!" she said quickly. "What became of him?"

"He was swept away by the tide!"

Into the proud eyes came a softer light—of regret, pain.

"Your Ladyship should remember it might have been worse," he added, in tones intended to reassure her. "After all, it was only a horse—"

"Only a horse!" she exclaimed indignantly. "But, I suppose you can't understand—caring for a horse!"

"I can understand caring for a ship!" he answered quickly, a flash of amusement, hardly concealed, in his bold, dark eyes.

"A ship!" scornfully; "dead wood and iron."

"Live wood and iron! Beautiful as—" The smile faded him; he looked at my lady. "Something to be depended on, with a hand to the wheel, and an eye keen for mad dances and curvettings."

"I might appreciate them better," she interrupted dryly, with delicate brows uplifted, "if they brought me nearer to the Mount. That, and no idle opinions," in accents that conveyed surprise at the temerity of one in his position to express them, "is of most moment!"

He accepted the reproof with a readiness that further surprised her. "Your Ladyship is right," he said. "I will see what may be done. The storm has passed. There is yet daylight, and—" an expression, almost preoccupied, came to his features—"a boat may be sighted."

"To be sure!" At the prospect, all other considerations passed from my lady's mind. "A boat may be sighted! Why did you not think of it before? Come! Too much time has already been lost." And she rose.

"One moment!" His voice was quiet; respectful; although, she fancied, constrained. "I had better go alone. The way to the cliff is rough and—"

"I shall not mind that!"

"Besides, your clothes—"

"Are dry!"

"No!" She flushed at the abrupt contradiction. "I mean, I don't see how they could be!" he went on hurriedly, "and," his tone assumed a certain obduracy. "I assure your Ladyship, it will be best."

"Best?" She looked at him more sharply. "Is that your only reason?"

"Why?" A trace of embarrassment, for an instant, crossed his dark features. "What other reason, my Lady?"

"That I know not!" quickly, assured her words had struck home. "Only I am certain there is one!"

"Then, if your Ladyship must know," he spoke slowly. "I did not wish to alarm you. But this is a rough coast, with—many rough people about—smugglers, privateersmen—"

"Whom you, perhaps, are expecting?" she cried suddenly.

"I!" with a careless laugh. "A fisherman! Your Ladyship is imaginative—" he began, when a sudden, hasty footstep clinked on the stones without; a hand caught at the fastenings of the door; flung it open.

"I thought I should find you here, Seigneur!" exclaimed a voice. Since—"The young man made a movement and the speaker stopped; caught sight of my lady, just beyond, in the fading light. And at the picture—her figure behind that other one—the fine, patrician features, framed by the disordered golden hair, the widely opened eyes, bright, expectant, the intruder started back."

"The Governor's daughter! You, Seigneur!" he stammered, and, raising his hand, involuntarily crossed himself.

The Kangaroo at Bay.

When pursued the kangaroo, if possible, directs his flight toward the river. If he reaches it he enters and, thanks to his great height, is able to go on foot to a depth where the dogs are obliged to swim. There he plants himself on his two hind legs and his tail, and, up to his shoulders in the water, he waits the attack of the dogs. With his forepaws he seizes by the head the first dog that approaches him, and, as he is more solidly balanced than his assailants, he holds the dog's nose under water as long as he can. Unless a second dog speedily comes to the rescue the first one is sure to be drowned. If a companion arrives and by his attacks on the kangaroo manages to set the captive free the latter drowned brute is glad to regain the shore as quickly as possible. In this way a strong and courageous male kangaroo will hold his own against twenty or thirty dogs, drowning some and frightening others, and the hunter is obliged to intervene with a bullet.

A Queer Chinese God.

Near Lienkiang, in the Chinese province of Fuchan, is a small pond, in area perhaps fifteen acres. By the lake is an ancient tomb of some distinguished officer of state, before which as guardians stand facing each other two colossal statues, one representing a civil and the other a military official. Long years have they stood there in lifelike attitude until at last, in popular belief, they have acquired life and power. The people have recourse to the stone civilian in all their domestic troubles. Every day the perfumed smoke of incense curls around his kindly face, while the hopes and requests are whispered into his marble ear, but only whispered, because no one wants the military man to overhear what is said. The latter's countenance is stern and forbidding, and when any one consults him it is known that his aid is wanted in matters of revenge or duplicity.

An Indignant Compliment.

On one occasion when a change in the cast had been made at the Savoy theater Sir Arthur Sullivan, who happened to be dining at the Savoy hotel, slipped away for a few minutes from the table and went into the theater to the upper circle, there to hear and judge for himself the capabilities of the new artists. As the play proceeded and a favorite score in the opera was taken the talented composer unconsciously commenced to hum the refrain as he desired it to be rendered. This considerably annoyed his next door neighbor, who abruptly remarked, "Excuse me, sir, if I mention the fact that I have paid my money to hear Sir Arthur Sullivan's charming opera as given by the company and not your confounded humming!" Sir Arthur returned to his dinner and related the incident with great gusto.

May Improve in Time.

The wife of a downtown merchant was horrified the other day when her six-year-old son was overheard to turn loose a succession of mixed words and slang phrases which would have done credit to a street gamin. That night when her husband came home she told him of the wonderful vocabulary which their only son and heir had acquired.

"Is it true that you have learned to swear?" the merchant asked his son. He was astonished when the youngster stammered up and said, "Yes, but I haven't learned to do it good yet."

It required several applications of the strap before the youngster knew that swearing was not an accomplishment.—Kansas City Journal.

An Arab in the Rain.

"Those who are not accustomed to rain are frightened by it," says a writer. "I once saw an Arab rained upon for the first time. He was abjectly terrified and demanded to have his passage paid from the country—Sicily—in which the dread phenomenon occurred. He had been conveyed from the Sahara, I think, by a European, whose servant he was, and he evidently thought his master was behaving abominably to him in permitting him to get wet. By the first steamer he returned to his native desert, abandoning excellent wares and shaking the raindrops furiously from his slippered feet."

Democratic Ticket

FOR PRESIDENT: WOODROW WILSON,
of New Jersey.

THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
of Indiana.

FOR CONGRESS:
J. HARRY COVINGTON,
of Talbot county.

Why Wilson Will Win

If the Democrats cannot elect Woodrow Wilson they could not elect anybody.

No Democratic national canvass since Jackson's has been inaugurated more auspiciously. The points of vantage may be summarized briefly as follows: A Democratic year. The people are disgusted with the Republican party and eager for a change.

Disruption of the opposition. The differences of the two wings, for the first time since the Republican party was born, are irreconcilable.

An open and honest convention. In marked contrast with the doings at Chicago, there was at Baltimore no arbitrary action on behalf of one candidate and no suggestion of bribery in the interest of another.

The main issue. At last the line is sharply drawn between excessive protection and a revenue tariff.

An unpledged candidate. Nobody pretends that Mr. Wilson is under the slightest obligation to any man or group of men for his nomination.

Elimination of bosses. So far from catering to those accustomed to control, Mr. Wilson defied them. He had not hesitated to denounce Mr. Murphy, Mr. Sullivan and Mr. Taggart by name. His sole appeal was to public opinion.

Independent support. Almost without exception the powerful public journals, have already pledged the exercise of their utmost endeavors on behalf of Democratic standard-bearer.

Moral sentiment. The widespread revulsion of conscientious citizens against political depravity, which Mr. Roosevelt has tried with consummate skill to capitalize for his own advancement, now inures to the advantage of Governor Wilson, to the great relief of millions who distrusted Roosevelt, but knew not where else to turn.

A vivid personality. Mr. Wilson has demonstrated matchless power of effective appeal to the masses generally, and to active, enthusiastic, younger men in particular. This means that his canvas will be surcharged with the same electrical, persuasive energy which achieved his nomination.

Such are some of the weighty influences whose tacit recognition has already induced a common belief that Mr. Wilson's election is a virtual certainty. —From Harper's Weekly.

Farm Colonies

In New England, New Jersey and some other thickly settled sections of the eastern part of the United States what are known as farm colonies are multiplying. The agricultural colonies are generally made up of foreign-born people who come from the same district in Italy, Russia or Hungary. Farming areas of 1,000, 2,000 and sometimes 3,000 acres are purchased and divided up into ten and twenty acre allotments. On each of these small farms a family settles and engages in the growing of fruits and garden vegetables for the supply of the larger Eastern cities. Many abandoned New England farms are thus being restored to productive usage.

Quite recently a 1,000 acre tract of land in Cecil county, located along the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, near Chesapeake City, has been purchased for a Polish farm colony. This land is to be cut up into ten-acre allotments, or into about one hundred small farms, upon which as many families will locate. The colony, it will be observed, is about midway between Baltimore and Philadelphia, and is in easy communication with both cities by water route, as well as by rail.

Maryland has inviting inducements for many such colonies. In Southern Maryland large areas suitable for cutting into small farms may be obtained at comparatively low cost. This land, in most instances, is splendidly adapted to the growing of fruits and vegetables. The soil is of far better average quality than the sandy soil of New Jersey. Upon ten acres of land farmed intensively not only a living can be made, but ultimate affluence may be attained. —Baltimore American.

How Captain Smith Might Have Been Saved

Still emphatic in his assertions that he saw Capt. E. J. Smith, who is supposed to have been drowned in the Titanic disaster, Peter Pryal, 907 Valley street, Baltimore, declared last week that he was sure the commander of the ill-fated ship is alive and well and in the employ of the White Star Line. In explaining the way in which the captain might have escaped death, Mr. Pryal said:

"The spot where the Titanic sank is not far from the place where I was cast away myself in 1860, when I was sailing on the Allen Liner Indian. The captain, whose name was Smith also, mistook a light on Barren Island for that of a ship and ran his vessel on the reef. We were lowered into boats and reached the Island. From there we were rescued by a number of fishing craft and were eventually taken to Boston.

"It would have been an easy matter for Captain Smith, of the Titanic, to have gotten into a lifeboat attired as a passenger, and again, knowing as he did the proximity of Barren Island, might have, under difficulties, of course, made his way there and thence to Cape Sable.

"Whether or not he did this or was saved in another way I do not know, but I do know that he is alive and that I saw him. I would know him anywhere and under any circumstances."

Mr. Pryal said that he believed that Captain Smith was too sensible a man to take his own life. He also said that the Captain had a mania for making speed records, as was shown in 1895, when captain of the Majestic, he ran the vessel on a reef near Barren Island, on the northern route. At the time Mr. Whitney, who was then secretary of war, was a passenger on the vessel with his daughter, and was emphatic in his criticism of the commander.

Mr. Pryal, with his wife and two daughters, will leave Baltimore on July 31 for his new home in Green Spring, Va., where Mrs. Pryal will undergo an operation.

Price of Clothes Will Be Advanced

The price of clothes will be advanced next year. This increased tax on the high cost of living is clearly indicated, New York merchants say, by the prices named by the leading producers of cloth, who have lifted the prices for the spring of 1913 season from 7 1/2 cents to 20 cents a yard above those which prevailed last year, when the values for the past spring season were announced. How much the merchant tailor or the retail clothier will charge the consumer because of the advances that have been made cannot be stated accurately, because there is every likelihood that the quotations just made will be further advanced before the season is very old.

Cloth prices are higher for the next spring season, agents say, because of conditions over which the manufacturers have no control. They say the most important element that brought about the advance is that the domestic wool clip this year is about 30,000,000 pounds smaller than a year ago. The price of wool also has gone up abroad, while mills owners say the high scale of wages and the shorter working hours also will have their effect on the increased price of cloth.

If one may judge by the conversation of the average man or woman, the communications to the newspapers and the discussions of popular gatherings, the one theme that is uppermost in the American mind today is the steadily rising cost of living, and the growing difficulty of making both ends meet. Many a family that has always considered itself fairly comfortable circumstances now feels the pinch of necessity; meat is entirely eschewed or bought in very moderate quantities; vacations are abandoned, and every expedient is resorted to to reduce expenses. This condition of affairs gives to the Democrats the strongest platform they could ask for. Cut out every unnecessary tax, whether of the tariff, or of Federal, State or city expenditure, so that the burden may be lessened to the consumer and taxpayer. With this as his slogan Governor Wilson should have an unprecedented majority, and with such a platform converted into deeds by a Democratic House and Senate the party should be assured and indefinite tenure of power. —Philadelphia Record.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fail to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address, F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio. Sold by Druggists, 75 cents. Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

A Gay Time in Salisbury

September 27th promises to be a mighty interesting day at Salisbury, if Superintendent William H. Anderson keeps his appointment for that date with Senator Price, and Mr. Anderson is a man who generally keeps his appointments. The free advertising which this entertainment has received guarantees a large audience, whether it is held in the Opera House or in the open, and it may be set down as one of the special fall attractions of the Eastern Shore.

We trust, for the sake of Eastern Shore hospitality, as well as for the sake of ordinary fair play, that eggs will not be used in the way the manager of the Opera House seems to fear. It is not a question of eggs, but of eggnog and kindred spirits and the attitude of Senator Price toward Mr. Anderson's favorite theory, and it is not an issue which even the whites of eggs, much less the yellows, can clarify.

Really, it looks as if Mr. Anderson were going to have a field day on September 27th and add decidedly to the gaiety and excitement of Salisbury and its vicinity. —Baltimore Sun.

A Tri-County High School

Representatives of Queen Anne, Talbot and Caroline school commissioners at a meeting recently held in Queen Anne considered plans submitted for a Tri-County High School. The building, as planned, will be a bungalow in type, with a four-column portico, wide spreading roof and pleasing effect to the eye, as well as comfortable for the pupils. There will be four large rooms on the one floor and an ample basement for three others. In this high school pupils will be taught who are ready to take up work from the eighth to the eleventh grade inclusive.

Dysentery is always serious and often a dangerous disease, but it can be cured. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy has cured it even when malignant and epidemic. For sale by all dealers.

Thaw Goes Back To Asylum

Harry K. Thaw, in the eyes of the law is still insane and must remain in the asylum, where he was placed on February 1, 1908, after he had killed Stanford White. Justice Martin J. Keogh, of the Supreme Court, at White Plains, N. Y., last Friday denied Thaw's application for freedom. The Court took the ground that Thaw's release would be dangerous to public safety.

If you are a housewife you cannot reasonably hope to be healthy or beautiful by washing dishes, sweeping and doing housework all day, and crawling into bed dead tired at night. You must get out into the open air and sunlight. If you do this every day and keep your stomach and bowels in good order by taking Chamberlain's Tablets when needed, you should become both healthy and beautiful. For sale by all dealers.

County Surveyor's NOTICE

The undersigned, as County Surveyor of Somerset county, by virtue of the January session, 1910, Chapter 748, of the laws of Maryland, hereby gives notice that he has received a Special Warrant, issued by the Honorable Commissioner of the Land Office, on the application of Sidney G. Saturday among the sales at public auction the Tunnell farm, containing 75 acres, unimproved by buildings, sold for $12,000. The Guy tract, of 123 acres, brought $12,670. The land belonging to the estate of the late Thomas B. James brought $50,300, an average of $100 per acre.

—Samuel Collier, colored, the engineer who was scalded in the boiler explosion of Gus Ritzel's thrashing machine, near Westover, died on Monday of last week and was buried Tuesday. The explosion is supposed to have been caused by a thin place in the plates. Collier died in agony. He had the furnace door open when the explosion occurred and the boiler blew out at the opposite end, but in the recoil of steam through the tubes he received the full contents in the face. Inward burns were the ultimate cause of death. He was 28 years old.

—The bugeye Seward, Capt. John Dorman, of Somerset county, loaded with tomato cans and cases and bound to Tyaskin, Md., was run down just above Cove Point by the steamer City of Norfolk, about 2 o'clock Wednesday morning. After the collision the steamer was stopped and an examination of the bugeye made by the captains of both vessels. Believing that the bugeye would float until the Patauxent river was reached the steamer took her in tow and proceeded up the bay. After about one hour's travel the bugeye suddenly sank carrying with her Captain Dorman and his mate Alexander Horsman. Captain Dorman succeeded in reaching a spar which kept him afloat until rescued, the mate was drowned. Both men were residents of this county.

—Mrs. Henry J. Waters gave a delightful card party to a number of her friends on Thursday morning last. The guests were as follows: Mrs. Robert F. Duer, Mrs. E. B. Polk, Mrs. John E. Holland, Mrs. J. T. Taylor, Mrs. E. P. Fitzgerald, Mrs. Albert Fitzgerald, Mrs. C. M. Dashiell, Mrs. William Todd, Mrs. H. L. Brittingham, Mrs. C. C. Waller, Mrs. E. O. Smith, Mrs. O. T. Beauchamp, Mrs. C. H. —Miss Helen V. Barnes, of King's Creek, who has been visiting her friend, Miss M. Grace Dennis, of Preston, has returned to her home after a ten days visit.

—Mr. and Mrs. Bennett P. Miles, of Norfolk, Va., spent last Saturday and Sunday in Princess Anne. They were entertained during their stay at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Z. W. Townsend.

—The Cambridge Record of Saturday says: Miss Addie Brown, who spent sometime with her sister, Mrs. C. J. Henry, at her home on Church street, returned on the train Tuesday to her home at Princess Anne. She was accompanied by her niece, Miss Eloise Henry.

—From The Chestertown Transcript of Saturday: "Prof. Walter H. Davis the popular principal of the Rock Hall High School, and Miss Helen Downey, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Downey, also of Rock Hall, were quietly married on Saturday evening. They will reside in Rock Hall, where both are quite popular." [Prof. Davis was principal of the Deal's Island School several years ago.—Ed.]

A Couple of Live Wires

By ANDREW J. WHITNEY

Abraham Patterson was a real estate and insurance man, and Johnny Thacker was his chief clerk, bookkeeper and man of all work, besides being care of the office, even to sweeping out. Soon after Johnny went with the real estate man the latter's daughter, aged seventeen, came into the office one morning to get some pin money and found Johnny there alone.

This visit was the beginning of a love affair between her and Johnny. Having found a visit to the office and upon him pleasant, Della came quite often after that, always choosing a time when her father was out drumming up or attending to business. Mr. Patterson was consequently ignorant of the growing attachment. Indeed he was unmindful of the fact that his daughter had outgrown her doll. As for Johnny, Patterson grudged him the $10 a week salary he paid him.

One day Mr. Patterson, just as he had started in for the sale of a piece of real estate upon which the commission would amount to $1,000, fell ill and was confined to his bed. Down to the office came Della with a note from him to Johnny stating that he must give up trying to bring about the trade and so inform the seller and a buyer to whom he had hoped to sell the property. Johnny read the note and pondered.

"What you thinking about?" asked the inquisitive Della.

"I was wondering if I could do the job."

"Of course you can."

At that moment Mr. Wardell, the owner of the property in question, came in and asked if Mr. Patterson was yet down. Johnny replied that he was a trifle indisposed and wouldn't arrive till afternoon, but he (Johnny) would do anything required in the meantime. "Tell him I've decided to take $40,000 for the property."

Mr. Wardell went out, and Johnny and Della consulted. The consultation ended in Della keeping office while Johnny went out to find Mr. Deacon, the expected purchaser. Deacon had offered $40,000, but the price was then $42,500. Johnny asked if he would buy at the price, and Deacon told him he thought he would. But before he could determine positively he must make another visit to the property and look it over.

Johnny returned to Della, and another consultation followed. A person had been in the office while Johnny was away from whom she had gathered that certain real estate agents of the town were getting busy about the property and a sale was likely to be made by another go-between who would gather in the commission. Della suggested that they report to Mr. Wardell that Mr. Deacon had accepted his offer and agreed to pay the $40,000. This would complete the sale so far as Mr. Wardell was concerned, and the bottom of the transaction could only drop out through Mr. Deacon.

Unfortunately for these young brokers Mr. Deacon on his way to inspect the property slipped off the curb and sprained his ankle. His wife telephoned to the office information of the fact, saying that there was little doubt that he would buy the property, but one more visit to the premises was necessary and her husband could not go out on his sprained ankle for several days.

"It's all up!" moaned Johnny. "I've heard on the street this morning that an agent was hunting for Mr. Wardell to offer him $45,000 for the property, but can't find him."

In comes the postman with a letter from Mr. Wardell dated in a neighboring town, asking for the contract of sale to be sent him with the customary deposit. This indicated that he considered his property sold. If the young brokers could stave him off till they could get a definite answer from Deacon the sale would be effected.

"I tell you what," said Della. "Send him a contract and purposely make an error in it. He'll have to send it back and by that time we may get Mr. Deacon up to the point."

"Good!" exclaimed Johnny, and, taking a blank contract, he filled it out on the typewriter, writing $40,000 instead of $45,000. Then he put it in a post box.

For the next two days the reports of offers for and sales of the property were in the air. The contract came back for correction, and the youngsters were at their wits' ends. Johnny went to the telephone and told Mr. Deacon that he'd have to "Yes" then or never. Deacon got a carriage, made his inspection, stopped at the office on his return and signed a contract of purchase with check for forfeiture.

As Johnny was going out of the office with him a broker came in and said: "I've got a contract of purchase signed for the Wardell property for $46,000. I can't find the owner. If you'll tell me where he is I'll divide commissions."

"Don't know anything about it," said John as he jumped into a cab and was driven in a hurry to a station. He got Wardell's signature and was back in town at 10 o'clock the next morning.

That day Patterson came to the office in care of his daughter. Johnny told him the story and showed him the contract. The real estate man looked from one to the other of the two youngsters, then hugged both.

The firm of Thacker & Co. now consists of Mr. and Mrs. Thacker. They are considered in the real estate market to be live wires.

AUTOMOBILES Why the Buick is the Best!

The government invited all the leading manufacturers of cars priced from $900 to $2000 to submit a car in competition to a committee of mechanical experts. The cars were driven to the designated place and the drivers dismissed. The examination was then made with no representative of any of the cars present. Motor for motor, shaft for shaft, bolt for bolt, the cars were compared, tested and appraised by the government experts. One by one cars were eliminated until but one remained. It was THE BUICK. Of the seventeen or eighteen cars submitted THE BUICK alone stood the rigid tests of quality and construction upon which the examination was based. This car was at once turned over to the government for immediate service.

Business Versus Luck

By THOMAS G. DEANE

"There's a lot of luck in the world," said John Jones, who in his younger days had been an inveterate gambler. "When I was betting on the cards my friends used to consider me all gone wrong. So I was, but it was not the chances of the game that did it; it was the fact that gambling has a bad effect on the gambler. I'm speaking, of course, of a fair game. A man who plays with professionals is sure to get cleaned out."

"I was playing one of those games once when I was handed a note from Tom Andrews, an old friend of mine, asking me to send him $500. Within a few hours I had won $5,000, and the $500 was a very small affair to me. I thought of sending Andrews the money."

"It occurred to me that within a few hours more I would probably have lost all my winnings, then I could draw on him for enough to start in with again. But I was so absorbed in the game that I doubt if this more than flashed through my mind."

"I didn't get cleaned out that day, but I did within a week. I didn't have enough money to buy a breakfast with. I was walking along the street looking longingly into restaurants when who should come along but Tom Andrews."

"I was much obliged to you for that loan you made me the other day," he began.

"What loan? You wouldn't believe it, but I had forgotten all about the $500 I had sent him. Then all of a sudden it all came back to me."

"You're just the man I want," I said. "I'm strapped. Let me have a hundred or two to begin again."

"He looked kind a blank. 'I'm awful sorry,' he said. 'I wanted that money for a friend, not for myself. He had once saved me from ruin. The day I sent to you he came to me and said that he had the prettiest opportunity of making a big spec you ever saw. All he needed was $500. Well, it put me in a very unpleasant position. I was under a great obligation to him, and yet I hadn't the money for him, so I told him that I thought I could borrow it for him, but as he was going into a speculation with it I thought the lender should be interested in his profits if he made any. I knew you took flyers with cards, and I didn't know but you'd take one in another way. I wrote you all about it in the note I sent asking for the loan which was— Didn't you read it?' "No, I didn't!" I snapped. "I may take chances on cards, but I'm not such a fool as to loan money to a man I never heard of to speculate with. Let me have half a dollar to buy a breakfast with."

"Tom let me have $10. I ate up a dollar of it and sank the rest in the usual way."

"About that time I fell in love. My girl wouldn't have me unless I broke off gambling entirely; so, as I couldn't do without her, I promised never to touch a card again. We were married, and to please her I went into the safest business I could find. I set up a corner grocery. But I must establish a trade, and the only way to do that was to trust those who hadn't the money convenient to pay with. This drew in the class of persons who run up big bills and let the grocer whistle for his money. I started in with a $10,000 capital that I had won at gambling, and it gradually got converted into uncollectable debts. I shinned along for awhile. Then one morning the sheriff came down on me and closed me out."

"I went home to my wife and told her that I didn't see the difference in taking risks on purchasers and on cards. At least what difference there was was in favor of the cards. She said that the trouble with me was that I was no manager. If we ever did get set up again she proposed to take the management of our affairs into her own hands and would show me that, while there was a good deal in luck, there were conditions on which one could calculate almost to a certainty."

"But we didn't get set up in a hurry. We passed through several years of poverty that make my flesh creep to remember. We had several kids and to live in comfort required an income we didn't have. I was tempted to try the cards again, but my wife wouldn't hear of it. I was too old to get a situation, and I was so wracked with worry that my health broke down."

"One morning on opening my mail I found a letter from a man I had never heard of inclosing a check for $54,500. The letter said that some years previously he had purchased with money loaned by me a suburban tract, which he had laid out into lots and had recently sold the last lot. He had promised Thomas Andrews, through whom the loan had been made, that the lender should have half the profits of the proposed speculation. I would find a check inclosed for my share of the profits less expenses, plus interest on $500 for seven years."

"Waving the check aloft, I cried out to my wife, 'It's all luck and nothing else.'"

"Having read the letter she remarked coolly, 'It isn't luck with that man at all; it's business.'"

"How do you know?" I asked.

"He's put in the interest on the loan."

RHEUMATISM

This nerve-racking disease is caused from impure blood and uric acid poison. External applications sometimes give temporary relief but won't cure; the sure way to secure permanent results is to thoroughly eradicate from the blood all the impurities. Nothing on earth will drive out the poisons from your system, keep the bowels, kidneys and liver in good condition as SEVEN BARKS, the wonderful remedy that has proved its great merits the past 42 years.
SEVEN BARKS can be had of all druggists, at 50 cents per bottle. Give it a good trial and watch your rheumatism disappear.
LYMAN BROWN, 48 Murray St., New York, N.Y.

Russian Discipline.
General Dragomiroff, the Russian military expert, rose from the ranks and always dressed according to the army regulations for the common soldier. One day while driving about St. Petersburg in his carriage he noticed a soldier with hair longer than the regulations called for. He had the horses stopped, alighted and, taking off his hat, ordered the soldier to seize him by the hair. The soldier hesitated. He feared to lay violent hands on his general. Besides, the hair was clipped too close to afford a hold for the hands. The general surveyed the soldier sternly for a few moments; then, twining his fingers in the latter's locks, he literally wiped up the street with him, the victim not daring to resist. Finally, having impressed the lesson thoroughly, he re-entered his carriage and drove on, ordering the soldier to follow. At the first barber's shop they came to he again alighted and had every vestige of hair shaved from the soldier's head, then turned him loose as a horrible example to his fellows.

Fooling the English.

The Duchess of Buckingham in her "Glimpses of Four Continents" tells an amusing story of the period when the Maoris were at war with England. All kinds of strategy was resorted to by both sides. When the Maoris were in want of bullets they used to shoot a dummy in the bush, and of course it was immediately fired at. A man in the bush then pulled it down with a string.

"Oh," thought the English soldiers, "we have done for him!" Up came the dummy again cautiously. Bang, bang, went the British rifles. Down fell the dummy. And this went on until some accidental shot cut the dummy rope, and no Maori would go up the tree to splice it, for the exposure meant certain death. The bullets were all taken out of a little earth bank which the Maoris had made behind the tree where the dummy appeared and were used over again. It was a long time before the artifice was discovered.

The Supreme Court.

Only four times has the supreme court responded to the outward voice of fashion. The first occasion was when it was decided to elevate the bench from the floor, for in the old days the judges occupied the same level as the lawyers and audience. At another time the carpet on the floor was changed after forty years of service. The next revolution occurred when reporters were allowed to take notes within the supreme court room. Before that the attorneys in the supreme court had to depend entirely on their memories to answer arguments of opponents who cited previous decisions. Another important change occurred when it was decided that the jurists of the highest tribunal should not by reason of their short recess suffer the same of the law as the title themselves. Now the court is a modern and comfortable place. The judge now adjourns at a midday meal.—Joe Mitchell's Column in News-Letter.

Very Cautious.

Little Ethel had been very naughty. It was her mother's way of her to tie the cat's tail to the chair leg and pour ink into her father's slippers. She deserved to be punished. So her mother sent her from the room without any dinner, but when the pudding came on the scene her conscience smote her, and she determined to give Ethel another chance.

"Tell Ethel if she will be very, very good for the rest of the afternoon she may have some pudding," she said to the servant.

The servant delivered the message and returned in a few minutes with the reply:

"Please mum, Miss Ethel wants to know what kind of pudding it is before she makes any promise."

Expressed His Feelings.

"This story proves the falsity of the old theory of teaching children words without meaning," said a university professor. "I visited a school where the teacher was giving words to her pupils to be pronounced, spelled and defined. One boy was given the word 'ferment.' 'It means to work,' said the boy. 'All right,' said the teacher, 'please give me a sentence.' This was the sentence: 'I would rather play outdoors than ferment in the school.'"

Sincere Admiration.

"Why do you insist on keeping a parrot?"
"Because," answered the lonely man, "I like to hear it talk. The parrot is the only creature gifted with the power of speech that is content to repeat just what it hears without trying to make a good story of it."—Washington Star.

Man and the Dog.

We are alone, absolutely alone, on this chance planet, and amid all the forms of life that surround us not one, excepting the dog, has made an alliance with us. A few creatures fear us, most are unaware of us, and not one loves us.—From a Masterful Essay.

Slightly Puzzled.

"Say, pa?"
"What is it?"
"Which union does a jack of all trades belong to?"—New York Press.

Two Relatives.

Bess—Charlie, will you tell me what time it is?

Needs Age.

Maud—That story you told about Alice isn't worth repeating. Kate—It's young yet; give it time.—Boston Transcript.

Red Cross Seals For 1912

Seventy-five million Red Cross Seals are now being printed for the holiday sale of these anti-tuberculosis stickers in 1912. The National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, which in co-operation with the American Red Cross will conduct the sale, makes this announcement and states further that the outlook this year is bright for a larger sale than ever before.

The seal this year is said to be the best of its kind that the Red Cross has ever issued. The design is in three colors, red, green and gray. A Santa Claus head in the three colors is shown in the center surrounded by holly wreaths. In each corner is a small red cross. The seal bears the greeting "Merry Christmas, Happy New Year, American Red Cross, 1912."

The campaign for selling Red Cross Seals will be carried on in practically every state and territory in the United States, and even in Porto Rico the Canal Zone, Hawaii and Philippine Islands. No less than 100,000 volunteer agents, including department, drug and other kinds of stores, motion picture theaters, individuals, and others, will be engaged in the work. Before the sale is completed, it is expected that at least 100,000,000 seals will have been printed and distributed, besides several million posters, display cards and other forms of advertising literature.

Last year over 32,000,000 seals were sold; in 1910, over 31,000,000; in 1909, about 28,000,000; and in 1908, the first year of the sale only 13,500,000. In all, the sale in the four years has realized nearly $1,000,000 for the anti-tuberculosis campaign, since all of the money this movement goes for the prevention of consumption.

New York state sold the most seals in 1911, disposing of 6,356,368; Ohio came next with 3,500,480; Wisconsin third with 2,913,144; and Illinois fourth with 2,101,632. Texas showed the greatest percentage of gain, having increased its sale from 100,000 in 1910 to over 1,250,000 in 1911. Indiana showed the second greatest gain, with an increase from 683,756 in 1910 to 1,245,545.

$50,000 Shaft to Key

Congressman J. Charles Linthicum, of Baltimore, launched a movement in Congress last week of a $50,000 monument at Fort McHenry to the memory of Francis Scott Key, author of "The Star-Spangled Banner," and the heroic men who repelled the assault of the British fleet on that fort. His bill directs the Secretary of War to have erected the memorial. It is proposed to place the monument at a point where it will be seen by passengers on all steamers passing up and down the harbor.

Maple Syrup Stalls Auto

N. R. Young, a New York musician, who is spending the summer at Intervale, N. H., came to grief on a motor trip to Jackson, where he met with a party of friends, in a peculiar fashion. Mr. Young, who keeps his motorcar in the Intervale House garage, takes all care of it himself and has been experimenting with various sorts of lubricating oils and has samples in tin maple syrup cans.

How a can containing genuine Vermont maple syrup came to be added to his store no one seems to know, but Mr. Young filled his oil tank before starting and everything went finely until Wentworth Hall was reached, when the engine refused to work.

Mr. Young then telephoned to H. S. Mudgett to tow him home. When the engine was taken apart it was so stuck together with maple syrup that it was only with the greatest difficulty that the piston rods were extracted. Mr. Young is now looking for the practical joker who was responsible for the substitution.

Just Government League Will Open New Offices

The Just Government League of Maryland is to open new offices. For quite a long while the members of the League have felt that their present quarters in the basement of the Charities Building, St. Paul and Pleasant streets, Baltimore, were too crowded and that the work was hampered for lack of space to move about in. The problem of choosing new quarters has kept the executive committee busy for several weeks and, out of the many sites under consideration, a choice was finally arrived at. It fell upon the suite of offices formerly occupied by the Equal Suffrage League, at 817 North Charles street.

The League will have the whole lower floor of the Charles street building which used to be a fine old dwelling with roomy, high ceilinged rooms, and situated near enough to the center of the city to be within easy access of every part of it. The League expects to move into the new headquarters about October 1st.

Mail Carriers Will Fly

This is an age of great discoveries. Progress rides on the air. Soon we may see Uncle Sam's mail carriers flying in all directions, transporting mail. People take a wonderful interest in a discovery that benefits them. That's why Dr. King's New Discovery for Coughs, Colds and other throat and lung diseases is the most popular medicine in America. "It cured me of a dreadful cough," writes Mrs. J. F. Davis, Stickney Corner, Md., "after doctor's treatment and all other remedies had failed." For coughs, colds or any bronchial affection its unequalled. Price 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free at Omar A. Jones' Drug Store.

SALISBURY'S GREAT FAIR

Aeroplane, Hippodrome, Sensational
Aerial Acts, Trotting,
Pacing and Running Events

August 13, 14, 15 and 16

ADMISSION PRICE—Last year we inaugurated a plan of charging 50c on Wednesday and Thursday. This was done in order that we might be able to give to the people amusements which would be impossible at the old admission prices. Believing that those attending were satisfied with program given, we have decided to continue this plan, have arranged a program this year which in every respect we believe to be equal if not superior, to the one given last year. We are spending a large amount of money for free attractions and believe that all will be satisfied with the entertainment offered.

SEASON TICKETS—In order that those who attend the Fair every day may do so without too great an expense, the Association has arranged for Season Tickets. These will be sold for $1.00 each, and will be good for one admission each day of the Fair. Same can be had by applying to the Secretary, Salisbury, Md.

GRANDSTAND—Grandstand tickets will be sold at 25 cents each day of the Fair.

AEROPLANE FLIGHTS

A great many saw the Aeroplane Flights at our Fair last year. They know that they were a success. For those who have never seen them, as well as for those who wish again to see this great exhibition, we have arranged with the Curtiss Co. for flights on the ground each day of the Fair. Remember we deliver the goods. No fakes here. The flights will take place.

HIPPODROME RACES

Arrangements have been made for the Hutton's Hippodrome to give daily exhibits on the track during the Fair. This is one of the best hippodrome Races obtainable. It carries from 12 to 15 spirited horses and able riders and drivers. Chariot Races, Running Races, High Jumping with the horses and other exciting events given daily.

AERIAL FEATURE

The Famous Marion Family, consisting of 4 gentlemen and 3 ladies have been engaged to give daily exhibits. This act is claimed to be the biggest aerial stunt in America. Wonderful gymnastic features are performed by the actors on a rigging suspended 30 feet in the air. This is the first real big aerial performance ever given by any Fair in this section of the country and should prove interesting and amusing to all. Consists of Single, Twisting, One and a Half, and a Double Somersault to catch and return. Aerial Casting, Dives and a Triple Somersault to net. A real thriller.

TROTTING AND PACING

The usual good sport in our trotting and pacing events will be found on the track this year. Good horses are expected and fine racing assured.

MUSIC

A good band will be on the grounds and furnish music during the day and night.

OTHER ATTRACTIONS

We have not the time nor space to outline the many interesting and amusing attractions which will be found on our Grounds this year, but the people can rest assured that everything that goes to make a Fair will be found here. A good show well worth a dollar.

NOTICE TO EXHIBITORS—The Salisbury Fair is looking for a good line of exhibits in every department. If you have anything, send it to us. Write for entry blanks and be sure to make your entries early.
