SATURDAY, JULY 1, 1876.

Our Standard Bearers.

For President of the United States:
SAMUEL J. TILDEN,
Of New York.

For Vice-President:
THOMAS A. HENDRICKS,
Of Indiana.

The St. Louis Convention met on Tuesday last, and on Wednesday nominated on the second ballot SAMUEL J. TILDEN, present Governor of New York, as the Democratic candidate for President, and on Thursday nominated THOS. A. HENDRICKS, at present Governor of Indiana, for Vice-President.

This is a strong ticket and will command the respect and support of every Democrat, as well as many of the most honest Republicans of our land, and we believe that on the 7th day of November next this ticket will be triumphantly elected. If they are not we shall be disposed to believe that this American nation have no respect for good and honest government, no dislike for the corrupt practices of the party in power.

SKETCH OF THE CANDIDATES.

SAMUEL JONES TILDEN was born in New Lebanon, Columbia co., N. Y. February 19th, 1814, and is consequently 62 years old. He entered Yale college in 1833, but completed his education at the University of New York, and was admitted to the bar, where he soon distinguished himself as one of the most brilliant men of his years. In 1846 he was a member of the State Constitutional Convention and the Assembly the same year, where he distinguished himself as a leading debater, and did much to shape the canal policy of the State. In 1855 and '56 he was chairman of the Democratic State Committee, and in 1867 was a member of the State Constitutional Convention, and took an active part in the leading measures presented. Was a member of the Assembly in 1862. In 1874 he was elected over Gov. John A. Dix, who was considered popular, Governor of the State of New York by a majority of 50,317. He has been engaged as counsel in many important cases, among which may be mentioned the Burdell, Cunningham case, also the Cumberland Coal case. He has often been employed by the State of New York to prosecute or defend for the commonwealth. Although in his 63rd year the Governor seems to be in the vigor and prime of life.

THOMAS ANDREWS HENDRICKS, our candidate for Vice President, was born in Muskingum county, Ohio, Sept. 7th, 1819, and is now 57 years old. In 1822 his father removed to Shelby county, Indiana. He graduated at South Hanover College in 1841, studied law at Chambersburg, Pa.; was admitted there in 1845, and returned to Indiana to practice. In 1847 was elected to the Assembly of his State. In 1858 was a member of the State Constitutional Convention. From 1851 to 1855 he represented his district in Congress. From 1855 to 1859 was Commissioner of the General Land Office; from 1863 to 1869 was U. S. Senator, and regarded at the Democratic leader in that body. In 1868 he was put forward for President by his friends at the New York Convention. The same year he was defeated for Governor by a few votes and false count. In 1872 was elected Governor for the term ending 1877. On the 4th of March next he will be installed Vice President of the United States, and the people will say amen.

St. Louis vs. Cincinnati.

The last gave its party a man who they would not have taken of their own choice, while it rejected the man they demanded. The first, with unprecedented unanimity answered the demands of its party. They have done their duty; their work will receive the hearty endorsement of not only the Democracy of the country, but all men who desire reform, honest government and justice to all will rally to the support of the St. Louis nominee. It is honest government the people want and they have despaired of it under the GRANT regime, or under the man he has by his agents, Morton and Conkling, chosen to be his successor. It would have been infinitely better for HAYES if HAYES and Bristow's friends had put him up. The people would then have hoped that GRANTISM would not be first at the feast and last at the burial. But such is the fact, and they shun the HAYES, WHEELERS, MORTONS, CONKLINGS, BUTLERS, CHANDLERS, &c., and look for pure and high-minded men who are above stealing, to take charge as servants of the people, of the priceless heritage of our freedom, and all the people will say amen.

The Centennial.

Last week we promised to give some further description of what we saw at the Centennial.

We entered the Main Building first, and passed through it by sections, taking a bird's eye view of the greater portion of the wonders therein, occasionally stopping to examine critically many of the productions of our own and foreign countries. After passing entirely through this building we took a ride around the entire grounds on the narrow gauge railroad. On our return we entered the Art Gallery. This building, though not more than one-tenth as large as the Main Building, will take quite as much time to see and admire the finest works of art perhaps now to be found in the world, or at least the greatest number collected at one grand studio. The house is not being ventilated sufficiently, and being nearly always crowded with persons whose curiosity and artistic taste leads them to and attracts them to hang around this grand panorama of beauty and excellence. We shall not attempt a description of any of the paintings to be seen there save and except one, which we are disposed to think ought not to be there. We refer to the painting representing the Battle of Gettysburg. In the first place we were informed, while inspecting the picture, by persons who were engaged on both sides, on that memorable day, that the picture is not a faithful representation of the engagement. We suppose the picture represented the feelings of the artist more truly and faithfully than the scenes there enacted. Any one can see by looking to the right field of the picture, where the artist has placed upon canvas the Confederates, he has taken his idea from Milton's Paradise Lost, and copied the countenances of the evil spirits there to be seen, as depicted in the faces of the fallen angels, while upon the other side of the picture, he has placed upon the countenance of every Federal officer, private, volunteer, drafted man and bounty jumper the face of an angel. We have no objection to the artist gratifying his own prejudice and enjoying it to his heart's content, but we do object to have the faces of the fathers, brothers, husbands and sons of the very people who are invited to take part in the Centennial re-union so distorted, disfigured and made demon-like, in order to insult them on their arrival at the very place where it is proposed to make all Americans happy. Therefore, we say this insulting, flaunting lie ought to be removed from its place, and if the Yankee prejudice must have something to gratify itself, let a painting be put in its place representing some other fruits of the war, such as the marriage of a Massachusetts school marm to a South Carolina "gentleman" of African "scut." We would not object to this if they desire it, for it would be much truer to life than the picture which has been suffered to hang in the Art Gallery thus far to insult the American taste. This was the only blur we saw upon the walls among this magnificent collection.

From this place we wended our way to Machinery Hall. Here ten thousand pieces of machinery exemplifying the ingenuity of our race, and told what man can accomplish in the way of expediting labor, travel and production. This department alone would pay for all the trouble and expense of going to see the great Exhibition.

Thence we visited the U. S. Government Exhibition Building. Here are many of the relics and trophies taken in battle, with all kinds of improved arms, ammunition, with guns of the largest calibre, with a thousand and one articles to amuse and instruct the understanding, while the collection of fossils, bones, reptiles, &c., greet the eye and lead to long catalogue of investigations and inquiries. We were not permitted to see Memorial Hall for want of time, but visited many of the cottages and buildings belonging to the several States and to foreign nations.

Suffice it to say, we were so much pleased that we expect to finish our investigations at some future time.

We may reasonably look forward now to a revival of business. The people will be inspired with hope and confidence in the future. That Tilden will be elected there can be no serious doubt, and the government will be administered in the interest of the whole people, and not run in the interest of stock jobbers, camp-followers, post traders, railroad kings, canal rings, Indian agents and thieves in general. We may expect once more to see American commerce whiten the seas with its canvas, which has been lagging so long under Republican rule till it is well nigh dead, not a single U. S. mail now crosses ing the Atlantic Ocean in an American vessel. This should not be so, nor will it be the case at the end of a Democratic administration.

Let the people now take courage. Our nation will be respected abroad, loved and prosperous at home, and its fair name and fame will be handed down to posterity rejoyced, redeemed and set at liberty, released from the thrall of debt, taxation and oppression of the people to enrich the plunderers from the White House down to the smallest Indian post.

Let the people rejoice. The bow of political promise is now stretched across the heavens from the stony banks of the Hudson to the alluvial prairies of the West. And not a single WHEELER shall pollute it by perching his filthy talons upon its pure crest, nor shall the haze (HAYES) of Ohio bedim its bright and variegated colors. Let the nation shout one loud amen.

The Centennial Era, a newspaper published in New York in the interest of the farmers, truckers and commission dealers, has been greatly enlarged and improved. It was run as the "Produce Report" for three or four years, but has made its appearance this year under the very appropriate cognomen of the Centennial Era. This is a good paper for farmers and advertisers, as it keeps fully up to the times and prices, and has a large and extended circulation among the farmers and business men of the country.

Samuel J. Tilden for President.

The Democratic Convention at St. Louis yesterday completed its work by nominating Samuel J. Tilden of New York as its candidate for President; and although it has long been evident that this must be done, we none the less thank God that it is done. It is an event of exceeding importance, and we are most grateful for it, not because it is in the interest of the Democratic party—for party as such we care nothing—but because it is in the interest of the country, and opens a way for our escape from the unappreciated evils and dangers which surround and threaten our young republic.

It is as a reformer, and because he is a reformer, that Mr. Tilden is selected to lead the Opposition in this Centennial year. Professions and promises of reform are easy, and when they are uttered merely in behalf of a party, and for the purposes of an election, they are almost always worthless; but this candidate has been tried in the fire and not found wanting. A man of a philosophic cast of mind, more thoughtful about principles and truths of political doctrine than about partisan success and the applications of party patronage, he became conspicuous on the stage of political affairs, not as an enemy of public plunder in the abstract, or as the assailant of thieves and robbers belonging to the other party merely, but as having laid his well upon the thieves and robbers of his own party, scourging them from their seats of power, and bringing them before the courts, where they have been tried, found guilty and sentenced to the penitentiary.

While such evidences of an earnest and impartial purpose to purify our republican system of government and make it once more clean and honest, have endeared Mr. Tilden to the masses of the people, they have not failed to provoke against him an antagonism at once intense, bitter, and pertinacious. As no other public man of our day can compare with him in his services to the cause of reform, so no other has been rewarded as he has with the confidence of the people and the hatred of peculators. The only case which bears any analogy to his is that of Benjamin H. Brewster, lately Secretary of the Treasury. He, too, was taken as a candidate by an earnest array of friends of reform before the National Convention of his party; but there he was rejected, a man of small account as a statesman and of no account as a reformer being preferred to him; while it is the glory of the Democracy that, in spite of hostility without and enmity of menaces without precedent, they have nominated Mr. Tilden by a great majority on the second ballot.

Such a nomination cannot fail to excite in every party of the country the most hearty and hopeful enthusiasm. We admit no doubt of its success. Our people are not so dull or so careless as not to know what is at stake in this election. From this day forward, until the end of the canvass, we look to see a growing zeal and an increasing courage and resolution on the part of those who support Mr. Tilden as the representative and the agent of reform. Independent men everywhere, who wear the collar of no party, and desire only the good of the country, will rally around him with earnest hearts, while the followers of Mr. Hayes will more and more be limited to officeholders and blind partisans, such as cannot have their eyes opened even by the venality and the shame of Robeson, of Delano or Belknap, of Babcock or Shepherd, and of Casey.

There would have been perhaps a greater satisfaction to the sense of political justice if the collapse of Grantism could have taken place with Grant himself as the candidate for the third term; but we dare say it will be no less thorough and no less signal with Hayes, and may God grant that such a hideous development of political corruption and public degradation as now weighs upon the country, may never again afflict the minds or cloud the fair fame, of the American people!—N. Y. Sun, (Independent.)

Campaign Tracts—The Indian Service.

A few days ago we showed from official figures the enormous growth of the federal patronage since the present administration came into power. In 1869, when General Grant was inaugurated, the total number of the civil employes of the government was 54,207. In 1875, when the last official list was published, they were 94,119, or nearly double. The necessity of supporting this army of one hundred thousand people is one reason why taxes are so high, and why, as a consequence, all branches of trade and industry are depressed. The same reckless extravagance and waste pervade every branch of the public service. We shall take one pure service this morning—the Indian department. The following are the expenditures for the last seven years:

1868.	$3,998,353 59
1869.	6,927,773 48
1870.	3,407,938 14
1871.	7,427,997 44
1872.	7,061,758 82
1873.	7,951,764 88
1874.	6,692,492 09
1875.	8,384,656 82

Total $51,851,615 26
Mr. Johnson was President in 1868. The expenditures then were exactly one-half of what they were the next year, which was the first of Grant's first term. With the exception of one year, the annual expenditures since 1868 have been more than double under Grant what they were under Johnson. Last year they were nearly trebled. These figures tell their own story. Millions and millions of dollars have gone into the pockets of the Delanos, the Smiths, and the other members of the Indian ring. Thieving contractors have made immense fortunes in that one bureau alone; while the poor Indians have not been one whit improved, either mentally or materially. Scarcely a year under the present administration has passed without one or two expensive Indian wars, which are directly traceable to the mismanagement of the government agents and employes. There are less Indians now than there were in 1868, because they have been shot down by the troopers of Sheridan, Custer and others; but while it cost about three million dollars to feed them then, it costs nearly nine millions now. In other words six millions of dollars—the difference between the appropriations of 1868 and 1875—were stolen last year by the Indian ring, at the back of which stands Ulysses S. Grant.—B. Gazette.

Gov. HAYES is certainly a kind-hearted man, with nice sympathies, and one who has the liking of his neighbors and fellow townsmen. His speech to his old friends at Fremont, Ohio, the other day, showed this very plainly. Of course no one expected him to talk on the political situation. He has been taught that the path of wisdom for him is to let that subject alone, to leave its treatment to his party managers. Therefore, at Fremont, he confined himself to a good-natured talk on things in general, and especially on the pleasant relations which had existed between his neighbors and himself, speaking with evident sincerity, but failing to exhibit either philosophy or intellectual power. A mind richly stored and freighted with the valuable lessons of experience would have made such a random speech notable for its wisdom, moralizing and fruitful suggestions. Gov. Hayes, however, did no more than make it kindly and weak. It was not the utterance of a vigorous and decided, but of a pliant and sentimental character. Is this the sort of man the country needs for President at this time of corruption and depressed business.—N. Y. Sun.

STORE ROBBER.—Wednesday night George Irving a negro youth, secreted himself in the store of Mr. Spencer McAllister, near Main street bridge, and after the store was closed proceeded to appropriate to his own use such goods as suited his fancy. After getting such things as he wanted, he laid down and took a little nap, intending to get up and away before day. He overslept himself, and when Mr. McAllister came down to his store on Thursday morning, the negro ran out by him as the front door was opened. The cry of "stop thief" was instantly raised, and the negro was captured by Mr. Wall Smith. A MATTER OF POPULAR INTEREST.

We condense from the Epoch Register the substance of a conversation about Oak Hall, in which the Wicomico and Salisbury Presses were present.

Editor: "What corner is the Building on?" "Attendant: "South-East corner of Sixth and Market. Please note the SIXTH, for some strangers seeking Oak Hall have been misled by designing persons."

"It is perfectly colossal! Do you know its dimensions?" "A. "12,000 square feet—56 on Market, and 150 on Sixth, six stories high, has over three acres of flooring, and covers space once occupied by the old building. The Building contains twenty different business places."

"Do you use the steam-power?" "A. A giant young engine furnishes power for the freight and passenger elevators, and the boilers steam for heating, and the other operations of the house."

"What order do you take with goods?" "A. They are first opened and arranged in the basement, on long low counters, and taken thence on the freight elevator to the inspectors' room on the 11th floor."

"No, sir, measuring. The goods are first measured in the place, then inspected. The cloth passes over rollers in the face of a strong light, and two men sit, one before and one behind the goods, watching with the eye of a hawk for the least pin-hole imperfection, and marking every flaw, so that the cutter may see and avoid it. What becomes of the garments?"

"A. You must employ an army of cutters!" "A. Come to our fifth floor and see! We keep 70 hands all the time cutting up the cloth into garments—besides the machines that do a dozen men's work each at a stroke!"

"Do you manufacture all your own goods?" "A. We do, and most carefully. Our customers inspect every stitch and seam, and certify to every garment as extra well made before we put our ticket on it, and become responsible for it."

"Your system must save you a great deal?" "A. In every direction, sir. It is the system and economy we practice all the way through, that enables us to put our price down to the people as we do."

"After inspecting the work, what becomes of it?" "A. Before it goes into Stock it is fitted. Every single garment has its number and other points noted on it, so that its entire history can be traced without fail, upon our books."

"You must have 20 or 30 salesmen?" "A. Why not, on busy days you may see 100 in the various rooms and suites of rooms, selling to the throngs of customers?"

"Do you do an order book, by mail and express?" "A. Very great. All over the country. Our perfect system and rules of self-measurement make it possible to please 2,000 men away from us perfectly as if they were here in person in America."

"I suppose you have at least half a dozen different departments?" "A. My dear sir, we have more than twenty departments, each charged with its own business, and each thoroughly organized, a necessary wheel with in the great wheel."

"Will you name a department or so of them?" "A. With pleasure. The Custom Department, for those who prefer custom-made to ready-made. The Furnishing Department, with its immense stock of all underwear, the Shirt Factory, with its busy machines, making our own first-class shirts. The Trimming Department, itself as busy as a regular store. The Garment Stock Room. The Receiving Room. The Order Department, named before. The Special Uniform Department. The Delivery Department, with its score of messengers."

"Hold, hold! stop, enough!" "A. I'm not half through! The Advertising Department, with its blank and sign distribution, circulars, etc., 60,000 copies monthly (sell all your factory goods for it). The Men's Department, with its many rooms. The Boys' Department. The Children's Department. The Children's Department, with its boys' and girls' book-keepers and assistants. General Manager's Department, with its Office, and its other offices of the firm all busy as bees, thinking, planning, executing, buying, making, registering, receiving, selling, and so on, and in a thousand ways joining their forces to carry on business with the people amounting to between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000 annually."

"I'm not half through! I forgot to name the Cashier's Department, which handles in $5,000,000 in some single days!" "A. Exactly! You have just hit it. The people that buy cheap and sell cheap, we depend on low prices and immediate sales."

"What are the 'rules'?" "A. Our system of business dealing—1. One price, no variation; 2. Cash for everything; 3. A guarantee protecting the purchaser; 4. The money returned if the buyer can't otherwise be satisfied."

"Nothing could be fairer!" "A. Nothing. And the people see it!" "Well, I thank you, sir, for your polite attention."

"Not at all. It's a pleasure to serve you. Call again; and be sure of the place—Wanamaker & Brown's Oak Hall, between Sixth and Seventh and Market."

"Thank you! I shall be happy to do so. Good morning."

ATLANTIC HOTEL.

New Seaside Summer Resort.

OCEAN CITY, SYNEPUXENT BEACH, MARYLAND.

The undersigned having leased this New and Commodious Hotel, (which was opened last position to give her when she goes by the mill, as she is sure to do this noon. I must say I'm disappointed in you.

Richard could not help laughing at the gravity of his companion. "You seem really troubled, Sam, about a small thing. It had seemed to take your advice and make up to Miss Depp. I should have given her her-honey flowers, not wild ones."

"She'd think a sight more of any than Miss Depp. I'll be bound she cares no more for posies than I do for—them stuffed sausages in the grocery yonder."

"I have a different opinion in regard to Miss Depp's tastes. I am told that she is very fond of being in the woods in the summer time, and as the weather has made it impossible for her to go there this season, I thought she would be pleased with the first wild honey-suckles."

Mr. Root shook his head. "If you want court Phoebe with posies don't you go and give 'em to Miss Depp. She'll throw 'em into the first gutter."

"I may surely be allowed to give a few flowers to a young lady without being accused of paying any special court to her."

"Court Miss Depp?" Sam was greatly amused at the idea. "I rather guess not. About the time you do that thing I expect to be standing on a barrel of powder with a match in my hand ready to rub along the sides of the barrel. No, Dick, my boy, I never thought of your courting that highbinder; but them posies just set me to thinking that a tender-hearted sort of chap like you might get to hankering after a girl you see so often. She has got a bright, wholesome face I won't deny, though I don't like her, and she does dress herself up in a wonderful way. I wonder what there is about her clothes that is so different from anybody else's? But don't it beat creation the way that girl looks at you and never sees you? I guess she thinks she's made of gold dust gathered on the top of Mt. Pizgal, and we are made of mud scraped out of the big ditch in Crook's meadows."

"It is most likely she never thinks of us at all. At all events she is nothing to either of us, so why should we quarrel about her? I'm sure we never exchanged a dozen words in regard to her before."

"Yes, but then you see you hadn't given her them posies, and—"

"O, hang the posies," said Richard, laughing. "They have turned your head."

"They may have turned a head, but it isn't mine," muttered Sam, as he went to his work.

As Richard was going home from the mill that night he saw a bunch of crushed and withered flowers lying on the curbstone. A nearer approach showed them to be wild honey-suckles, tied with a narrow scarlet ribbon. He pushed them into the gutter with his foot.

"Sam has read her better than I," he thought, "and I am a fool for my pains."

Irresistible Gait (to waiter)—"They say there's nothing like leather, don't they?" "Yes, sir." "Then it's a lie, for this steak is!" (Waiter evaporates.)

"Is the moon made of green cheese, youngster?" "No, sir, certainly not." "How do you prove that?" "Oh, easy—the moon was made before the cows."

"Does this razor take hold well?" asked the ailing barber. "Yes," replied the unhappy victim. "It takes hold well, but it doesn't let go worth a cent."

came to a wide, deep shadowed brook, whose waters flowed quietly down to the river. She followed it weaving fancies (as girls will) of the lover who was to come to her, perhaps in some such beautiful woodland haunt as this. She would know him at once, and they would wander away together into forests of perpetual green, whose poetry and music would never die.

But she stopped abruptly. She was in a strange place. There were no familiar landmarks around her. She was not alarmed, for the forest was not so extensive that she could not find her way out of it, and there was the turned to retrace her steps; her eyes were caught by a cluster of wild columbines that were swaying themselves in the sunlight on the crest of a hill near her. They were not common in Dorchester, and Madeline eagerly up the hill, and stooped to gather them, without seeing what was before her.

This simple act seemed to cause a convulsion of nature. The earth gave way under her feet. There swept over her an awful feeling of darkness, and of being borne through illimitable space. Then a violent jerk caused her to open her eyes, which she had involuntarily closed, and she found herself lying among the branches of a large bush that had sprung out of the crevice of a bare, rocky wall below her, and at her feet flowed the river Chinc.

Above her it rained itself, silver and smooth, several feet beyond the topmost twigs of the bush that had caused her from quick destruction. She had often seen this rock, when boating on the river, for it was quite famous in the neighborhood, but she had never before been on its treacherous top. If she could swim it would be best to lose her hold and trust to the river, but she could not swim. The level ground was not far above her; she could count the columbines that were gaily nodding to her over the cliff. But there was nothing for hand or foot to hold by in the ascent. Thus, in a moment's time she took in the whole situation, and then she screamed loudly for help. She had often met wood-cutters in these woods. But she had seen none to-day, and no sound broke the profound stillness around her. Even the pleasant wood noises had ceased, or her fright had rendered her deaf to them. But some one might be near enough to hear her shriek. She listened, but only the echo of her own cry came to her. Still she continued to cry for help, while the branches on which she was resting yielded more and more to the pressure; those who had grasped with her hands bent lower and lower.

At such awful moments what trifles creep into the mind and mingle with the most solemn thoughts. While conscious that death was near her, she noticed the presence of a faint, sweet odor. Some half-withered pink blossoms touched her forehead with their cool leaves. They were a few wild honey-suckles that had lingered beyond their season on the bush in which she lay. At once they subtly associated themselves with the engine room. It hung between her and the sky like a picture; the long, dim room, with the April sunlight struggling through the dingy windows; the swiftly, softly-moving machinery; the young man offering her a bunch of honeysuckles, whose wild fragrance was so refreshing in that thick, hot atmosphere. Hark! Was not that the sound of oars? A boat on the river? No; it was only the wind among the tree-tops. She could not now remember what had become of the flowers, but there came vividly into her mind all that this young man had said to her the night before. Had this fearful death come to her because her sin toward her work people had been so great? It was a heavy penalty to pay for mere thoughtlessness. But was that an excuse? Could she not have read their duties clearly had she but opened her eyes? Hark, again!—That was like the breaking of twigs. Could it be only a rabbit? She hushed her screams and listened. Utter silence. If she were saved she would lose her time and money to those people and to all who needed help. For Madeline expected to be saved somehow. —God would not let her die in this way. Again she heard a noise! The crackling of dry wood! She stopped calling for help and listened again. This time she distinctly heard footsteps. They ceased. She began her cries again, and then she heard the footsteps swiftly approaching. It was the heavy tread of a man. Was it a wood-cutter? or was it the young engineer?

Her mind had been so filled with what the engineer had said to her, that when the blessed feet that were coming to save her crunched the moss at the edge of the cliff she expected to see the face full of eager intelligence that had looked opposite her the evening before. But between her and the sky, there was thrust forth a misshapen head, rough, with bristly hair, and a countenance bloated and savage. Terrified at this horrible apparition, Madeline was near letting go her hold on the bush, but the instinct of self-preservation soon brought her to her senses.

She had need of them all, for the creature, glaring at her from the cliff ledge, knew the man very well. He was a poor imbecile, who looked like a large over the country. He looked like a wild beast, but was perfectly harmless, a kind creature, in fact. He was known among the boys by the name of John the Baptist because he wore a long, loose woolen tunic, fastened around his waist with many coils of rope. Madeline saw that if she could make him understand what she wanted this rope might be her salvation. She spoke to him, and it was evident that he recognized her voice, for he began grinning, chattering and nodding to her in a manner he intended to be friendly, but which was fearful enough.

Poetry.

Summer Splendor.
BY AMANDA.

Oh! Summer splendor,
Soft and tender,
Fill my soul with dreams of light;
O'er life's sadness,
Drop thy gladness,
Fragrance-garlanded, and bright.

Ye summers olden,
Fair and golden,
Weave me more of radiant sheen;
Let me cherish,
Though they perish,
All the sweets that drift between.

God's summer beauty,
Truth and duty,
The way my feet should go;
But, hearts grow weary, Life grows dreary
And feet will shrink from paths of woe.

Life's dreaded morrow Fain would borrow
From to-day its tenderest dream,
To hold and cherish,
When all shall perish
That lit with hope life's mystic stream.

Oh! human gladness!
Oh! human sadness!
What fragile walls between thee rise; How oft thy seeming Is but dreaming
Of aching hearts, and laughing eyes.

Oh! Summer splendor,
Soft and tender,
Why are ye, ye, so fair to see?
O'er life's sadness,
Scant of gladness,
Has your glory brought to me.

But, ah! I love ye, Still must love ye,
Summer glories, sweet and fair;
For your splendor,
Soft and tender,
Weaves a halo, rich and rare.

Around a face,
Nor time nor space,
Will ever pluck from Faith's pure shrine—Oh! rich and rare!
Oh! true and fair!
Oh! sweetest dream—oh! treasure mine!

THE GREAT WHEEL.

CHAPTER IV—Continued.
It did not seem to occur to him that she needed help. He probably thought she had chosen that spot for a swing on the honeysuckle branches and was enjoying herself thoroughly.
She explained to him in the simplest words she could do what she wanted him to do, and after she had repeated the word rope many times, she saw a gleam of intelligence in his eyes. He raised himself upon his knees and began to unwind the rope from his body. He was very deliberate about it, and once he stopped, and Madeline's heart ceased beating for an instant! But he at last got it all off, and then coiled it up in his hand. Madeline watched him with the keenest anxiety, for she thought it just as likely he would throw the rope into the river as lower it to her, and the roots of the honeysuckle bush were beginning to thrust themselves ominously forth from the crevices.

The end of the rope fell at Made-line's feet, and oh joy! he held the other end firmly in his strong hands!
She knew she was running a fearful risk, for there was no knowing what whim might take possession of this idiot, who literally held her life in his hands. He seemed to regard the whole affair as a joke, and merrily drew up the rope, clattering and laughing. He had no thought for Madeline's comfort in the ascent, and she soon found that she had to use one hand to keep her brains from being dashed out as she swung against the rocks. Twice he ceased pulling her up to indulge in loud bursts of laughter, and Madeline feared she was lost. The truth was, the creature had not a glimmering idea that he was saving a life, but he had a great affection for his rope, and would not, on any account, have thrown it away; and, as he drew it back into his own safe-keeping, Madeline came with it, and was at last on the firm ground, weak from fright, but with no hurt save a few bruises.

She sank upon the grass, and, while the idiot was winding his rope around his waist again, patting it and talking to it, she searched her pocket for something to give him.— The portmanteau she had with her was as plumed as a child, but when she opened it for him and he saw that there was a bank note within, he manifested the most extravagant joy. I do not think he was, he knew well enough the use of such a slip of paper, and he set off at a rapid pace toward the town, giving no further heed to Madeline.

After a fervent thanksgiving for her deliverance Madeline looked at her watch, and found that exactly fifteen minutes had elapsed from the time she had turned to retrace her steps and had caught a view of the cumbines. She had supposed it to have been an hour at least. After a few moments' rest she walked slowly back to the cabin, where she found Molly standing in the doorway looking anxiously for her appearance. The family had just finished their dinner, and Madeline accepted of Mrs. Jessup's offer of a cup of tea, and sat in a chair under the trees and sipped it until she felt sufficiently strong to walk home; but she said nothing about her adventure.

When she returned to the handsome granite house and the beautiful grounds for once they failed to give her any glow of pleasure. She, the owner of it all, had just owed her life to a poor imbecile. She had come so near to losing these treasures that they now seemed to her as unsubstantial as those castles and gorgeous landscapes the sun hangs in the western evening sky. She had a tete-a-tete dinner with Miss Pinder and in such circumstances it was easy to avoid talking if one was so minded. It was only necessary to give the good lady the cue to some story of an "old family," and she would bowl gently along, without requiring much attention on the part of her auditors. Madeline shrank from relating her morning adventure to any one. Death had looked her in the face and put into her mind such solemn thoughts that she could not bear to have her subject touched by others, and turned over and over, and bespattered with commonplaces. It was her own sacred secret.

Nor did she forget the resolutions she had made. She denied herself to all visitors that afternoon that she might think over some plan of work on these resolutions. She no longer endeavored to convince herself that everything was right among her people. Her people! It was not pleasant to regard them in that light.
She would have preferred to think that they had chosen a certain kind of labor; had applied to her factory for it; had received it as a great boon; were paid for the doing of it, and that there all her concern with it ceased. She did not mind spending money. If only she could find some one she could trust, and say to him: "I will give you so much money every year to spend for the good of those people." But somehow this did not seem to her the right way.— She had promised, under circumstances that made a promise sacred, to do for them herself. Some wild ideas of Bible readers, gray clad women and Sisters of Charity floated through her mind.

But this loose way of considering the matter would not lead to anything. She must make plans, and she wanted help. She distrusted her own ability in this line, and she could never do anything without securing sympathy beforehand. Her young friends were not available for such a purpose as this. They would stare at her in bewilderment, and laugh behind her back. Mr. Grahame would "pooh-pooh" the whole affair, and Mr. Barker would think her seasably disordered. Miss Pinder was as useless a mortal as was ever created.

At last her countenance brightened. She thought of one who, above all others, could assist her in her enterprise. She would consult Phoebe Ware. Phoebe was herself a poor girl—not so poor as those factory girls, but she had been brought somewhat into contact with them, and understood their needs. And she was such a lady-like girl, and wonderfully clever.

Popular Mass-meeting in Presidential Campaigns.

Those who suppose that the popular interest and excitement which naturally attend a Presidential election have always been shown in the same way will be surprised to know that the monster meetings and the universal stump-speaking are a comparatively modern practice. The national nominating convention itself is not half a century old. The old practice was a caucus of the members of Congress belonging to the different parties. The last of these was held with doubt and protest in 1824, and nominated Mr. Crawford, the Secretary of the Treasury under Mr.
Monroe. But that election was a "caucus race" between General Jackson, John Quincy Adams, William H. Crawford, and Henry Clay, in which the caucus candidate received only forty-one electoral votes, while Jackson received ninety-nine, Adams eighty-four, and Clay thirty-seven.
This was the end of the Congressional nominating caucus. The next step was the nomination by State Legislatures, and at length by the National Convention. As the method of nomination has become more popular the prosecution of the canvass has assumed more of the same character.

The fathers of the Constitution intended that the selection of a candidate should be made not by the voters themselves, but by representatives chosen by the people for that purpose. But this method failed for obvious reasons. The nomination by the Congressional caucus was a practice which retained something of the spirit of the original plan. But the argument against the one was conclusive against the other, and as the method of nomination has changed, so that of the election will probably be modified.

With the nominating conventions, which were in the beginning often mass-meetings, the system of monster meetings was introduced. The beginning is noticed by John Quincy Adams, the most experienced political observer in the country, with great alarm and apprehension. The convention of the Whig young men in Baltimore in 1840 which nominated General Harrison amounted, he says, with amazement, to twenty thousand delegates. This was followed by "convocations of thousands of people to hear inflammatory harangues against Martin Van Buren and his administration by Henry Clay, Daniel Webster, and all the principal opposition orators in and out of Congress." Mr. Adams was invited to address such meetings in all parts of the country, including Virginia, Tennessee, and Maryland, but he declined with a kind of terror. Mr.
Caleb Cushing's political friends gave him a public dinner, amidst popular festivities, at Newburyport, and invited their neighbor, the ex-President, a tough and courageous man of seventy-six, to attend. But he declined, and wrote in his diary:
"Mr. Webster and Mr. Saltonstall were there, and a stump speech was made, and it is said, a procession of six thousand people or more, and a dinner of eighteen hundred. Here is a revolution in the habit and manners of the people. Where will it end? These are party movements, and must, in the natural progress of things, become antagonistic. These meetings can not be multiplied in numbers and frequency without resulting in yet deeper tragedies. Their manifest tendency is to civil war."

The experience of a generation has not justified these lugubrious forebodings, which were yet natural to a public man, seventy-six years old, who had seen the earlier and simpler methods. A man, however, who had also seen the election of Jefferson in the House might have felt that there was no more danger in the popular than in the exclusive system. Party spirit was never more fierce than in the younger days of John Quincy Adams. The later methods of free and general expression have remedied some of its perils. The very canvass which Mr. Adams contemplated with astonishment and dread was full of good humor. It will always be known as the hard-side campaign, and it was a kind of universal jollication. "Lillibulero" did not more surely sing King James out of the three kingdoms than "Tippecanoe and Tyler too" sang Van Buren out of the Presidency.

There will be nothing at the Continent Exhibition so remarkable and significant to that distinguished visitor, the thoughtful foreigner, as the spectacle of the nation itself engaged in the canvass for the Presidency. It is at such times, in the midst of the great assemblies stimulated and swayed by partisan oratory, that the essential character of our system is seen. The meetings are huge, but they are instinctively self-governing. The police would be powerless should they attempt to cope with any serious disturbance at such meetings, except from the consciousness of every officer that he is supported by the approval, and if necessary the muscle, of the vast multitude. The crowd does not represent hostility to the government or to law, for it is itself consciously part of the government and of the law making power. Moreover, the great meetings are great safety valves. Passion exhales in free expression. The appeal to rancorous and mischievous feeling fails in a comfortable and good-natured crowd of industrious people who have a real "stake in the state"—and almost every large collection of Americans must be of that kind—as Canning's radical failed with the needy knife-grinder. Indeed, it is the radical who must have a story to tell. The first requirement of the orator of a monster meeting is that he shall be entertaining. Mr. Webster did not prove to be the hero of such assemblies.
"Tom" Corwin, "Jim Nye"—then on the other side—and in one year John Van Buren, were the kind of orator that the occasion demanded.
Mr. Adams would have been lost in amazement if he could have known that, twenty years after he saw with fear the beginning of the mass-meetings, and on the eve of a dreadful civil war, the Presidential canvass would be conducted with perfect toleration upon both sides in that part of the country where there were two sides.

The "thoughtful foreigner" will see the same spectacle this year, happily without the gloomy background. He will see the whole country politically alive, active, and noisy. Huge meetings, tumultuous enthusiasm, endless speeches, music, fire-works, shouting that will seem to ring from ocean to ocean, then a quiet voting between sunrise and sunset of a November day, followed by universal acquiescence in the result, and the return of everybody to his ordinary occupation.
It will be a spectacle more inspiring than that of Japanese war at the at the Centennial Exhibition—a result worth a hundred years of experience.—Editor's Easy Chair, in Harper's Magazine for August.

[ORIGINAL.]

Early Agriculture in Old Somerset.

H. N. Crawford, Esq., having given particular attention on the 4th in Salisbury to this subject, it may seem invidious to refer to it again. Some few things, however, culled from sources not generally accessible, it may not be improper to spread before the people through the Press, and thus place before those who had not the good fortune to hear his address some facts as to how our "fathers" did in their day.

When the colonists arrived at St.
Mary's they found the staple crops of the Indians to be corn and tobacco.— Their corn crop the first year after their arrival must have been simply enormous, since they were able to send 10,000 bushels, according to one authority, and 1,000, according to another, to New England for "merchandise." Tobacco seems to have soon usurped its place, as eight years after the settlement at St.
Mary's, "Viewers" (Inspectors) of tobacco were appointed, without whose "seal" none could be exported.

Corn seems to have engaged the attention of the 1st Legislature in 1637, when an act was passed for the "Planting of Corn," as also one for "corn measures." In '38 there was another act about "Planting Corn," and the year following a similar act, with one against the "Exportation of Corn" (i. e. sending it out of the Province). In 1641 we have another about "measures." In the same year we have a "act" assessed of 15 lbs. of tobacco per poll on every inhabitant above 12 years of age, and the next year 5 per cent. were levied on "all tobaccos exported," Virginia, England, Ireland, excepted as the "last port." In 1642 "Planting of Corn" is again mentioned, and 1647 "soldier's wages" were levied on corn. And in 1649 "every taxable person planting tobacco was obliged to plant and tend 2 acres of corn," or "forfeit 50 lbs. of tobacco for every half acre he should fall short of that proportion, besides 50 lbs. to the constable and his assistant." The next year 3 bushels of corn per poll was allowed to the Governor. Another act concerning the "Planting of Corn" occurs in 1654. In 1657 the "Proprietary Tax" was 32 pounds of tobacco per poll.

Thus we see for 20 years after the first settlement of the Province the Fathers were solicitous about the "staff of life."

Very few of the taxes levied prior to the Revolution were payable in "specie," although Maryland made provision for a "mint" as early as 1661. These were generally payable at the County Towns.
In 1704 for the first time were "Justices of the several County Courts" authorized to "levy taxes to pay county charges."

As the wealth of the Province slowly depended on the amount of tobacco grown and exported, and this depended on the number of warehouses in each county from which it could be exported after inspection, the act of 1668, appointing the warehouses for the different counties, with the number of inspectors, affords a proximate view. We tabulate the result as follows, promising they are those where the law required to attend "over of Sundays, from 4
July."

And it is quite probable that from this an approximate estimate of the wealth of the counties may be formed. The table is valuable as showing the counties where experience showed it to be a paying crop, or one where it could be grown with the greatest profit.

Following up the idea we give the location of the several warehouses in Somerset and Worcester counties.

SOMERSET.—Princess Anne Town, near Monmouth Bridge, and Madox's land, below the mouth of Back Creek—2 inspectors.

Great Annessex, Horsey's Land on Coleburn's Creek, at the Old Town, and Rehoboth Town, on the Pocomoke—2 inspectors.

Warehouse near Green Hill Town, on the Wicomico, and Brown's Land, at the head of Barron Creek on the Nanticoke—2 inspectors.

These inspectors were paid a salary of 5,600 lbs. of tobacco each.

WORCESTER.—Col. Scarborough's warehouse in Snow Hill Town—1 inspector.

Newport Town—1 inspector. Broad Creek, on the North side, at the Wading Place—1 inspector.

The inspector at Scarborough's and Newport Town was to attend 4 days in each week, and the one at Broad Creek only 2 days. The salary of the first was 8,000 lbs. tobacco; of the second, 4,800 lbs., and of the last 2,000 lbs. of tobacco.

The salaries of the inspectors in the State varied from 10,400 lbs. tobacco paid the Inspector at the Hunting Creek Warehouse, in Dorchester, to 2,000 lbs. tobacco paid the Inspector at Broad Creek in Worcester, it being the least. Looking at the amount of salaries paid in the other counties of the State, old Somerset seem never to have reached the first rank as a tobacco growing county.

There were 59 inspectors in the State who were paid more, 6 who were paid the same, and 38 who were paid less than her.

Viewed in another light, it would appear as if the light lands around Snow Hill excelled those in the upper part of that county, as well as those of the upper section of Somerset in productiveness of tobacco. Yet the land around the "Springs" must have been remarkably productive since there were Warehouse at Vienna, one above "Crocker's Ferry," one at the Wading place, on Broad Creek, and one at Green Hill to compete with them, while Snow Hill had only the small one at "Broad Creek," and the one at "Rehoboth" as competitors. The truth seems to be that Somerset, from Princess Anne to Annemessex and all around Snow Hill, was comparatively thickly settled in comparison with the other sections of the two counties, and this rather than superior productiveness of the lands, led to the more abundant production of tobacco.

Again, a comparison of the lands then with those now, when tobacco has ceased to be grown on account of the poverty of the soil, suggests some very pertinent enquiries as to how they have become changed. They are too many and too varied to be treated of in this article, nor unduly prolonged. The investigation, and the results may be founded on facts in the tables, and the condition of lands in those sections where tobacco was once the staple crop. Yet tobacco could not have been at one time worth much, since the Rev. Alexander Adams, in a letter to the Bishop of London in 1711, says he preached to "six congregations in four parishes of Somerset county and got a poor ten shillings in money for his ministry and perquisites since October last, tobacco being worth nothing."

It may be added that his Lordship, the Proprietor, received Lordship in 1671 in discharge of "Rent" and Annation Fines at 2d per lb., which was continued by the act of 1715. Yet tobacco in 1692 was worth less than 11d per pound in silver and gold.

By observing the following rules during the heated, you may save your life, while the neglect of them may prove fatal:

First. Personal cleanliness, so that the pores of the skin may be kept free open and the perspiration unobstructed. A morning bath will assist largely in giving tone to the system throughout the day. A bath in the afternoon, and especially on a full stomach, is to be avoided. When a bath is not to be had, sponge with cold water, or even the use of wet towels, is the next best thing.

Second. Temperance in eating and drinking. But little meat is required in hot weather. The food should be light and not stimulating. The dinner being composed mainly of vegetables as fresh as they can be obtained, and well cooked. Fermented or distilled liquors should be drunk sparingly, if at all; simple non-alcoholic drinks, such as lemonade, being the most cooling and refreshing.

Third. Avoid the direct rays of the sun as much as possible. Where this is unavoidable a wet, gray or cabbage leaf, or better still, a thin slice of sponge dampened and worn in the hat will afford great protection against sunstroke.

Fourth. Avoid hurry and excitement. Move slowly in walking, and in the shade, where shade is to be had, and cease to fret about trifles. In short, strive in every way to keep cool. In cases of sunstroke the best authorities tell us that "cold applications to the head, friction of the limbs, a mustard plaster placed over the stomach, and when the patient can swallow, the internal administration of stimulants in the treatment that affords the most satisfactory results."

In Caroline county there have been two executions in a century.

Poetry.

Do Your Best.

The heart and mind of man and man Must differ, it is true, And so the deed our neighbor does Perchance we never could do.

And thus, in climbing fortune's height,
To reach the fame in store,
If people do their best
The world will ask no more.

Does the little humming bird Its tender song forsake, Because the nightingale's sweet voice More soter music make?

Or does the tiny, twinkling star,
Which lends to earth its light, Repine because some kindred orb May chance to burn more bright?

And so through life we find that some Are clad with praise and fame, While others meekly plod along,
With naught to gild their name;

But when earth life is reckoned up,
Its doings counted o'er,
If we can say, "I done my best,"
Our God will ask no more.

CHAPTER V.
NEW SPOKES.

Some of the outlying streets of Upper Town are nothing more than country lanes, where the grass grows in the road, and the sidewalks are merely well-worn paths. In one of these streets lived Phoebe Ware and her mother. Their house was a plain brick structure, square and low, but looked comfortable and home-like, with its pretty little garden and orchard. It was furnished with some pretension to style, for, though the wares did not move in the aristocratic element of the town—that is, among the people who made clothing and buttons and candles—yet they were universally acknowledged to be "quite genteel."

On the evening of that day in which Madeline had been in such great peril, Phoebe was seated in what she chose to call "the library." The room established its right to be so considered on the credit of a bookcase of somewhat diminutive size, and a long table in the middle of the room with green leather let into the mahogany.
The bookcase contained half a dozen shelves of books of all sizes, colors and shapes, with a lower compartment filled with paper-covered novels, all of them very much worn. The walls were hung with water-color drawings and crayon sketches done by Miss Phoebe's own fingers. On the table a lamp was brightly burning; a few books bound in morocco and gilt were laid about with studied carelessness, and a portfolio containing engravings cut out of old magazines occupied a conspicuous position.

By the side of the table Phoebe herself was seated in a comfortable attitude in an easy chair, with her feet crisscrossed and her hands reposed in her lap. She looked around which furnished in luxuriant "raised work" on her footstool. Nature had touched her skin, and lips, and eyes, and hair with a most beautiful coloring, and thus had made of her a very pretty girl; but it was an indefinite sort of prettiness that was unsatisfactory.

She had a school philosophy open at a diagram of a steam engine, and was trying to find out what influence had upon it, and why it should go this way and that where in the world was it when "the girl" opened the door and ushered in Madeline Depp.

Phoebe was completely taken by surprise; for, though she had spent her "finishing year" at the school where Madeline had been educated, and the two were therefore on speaking terms, yet owing to the closely drawn lines of distinction in Deppford, they seldom met, and never visited each other. She looked around with dismay at the scantily furnished room, and thought regretfully of the glories of the parlor where there was a tapestry carpet and a crimson velvet sofa. She apologized to Madeline for her having been brought in there.

"Don't take me into the parlor," Phoebe, I beg of you," said Madeline in reply. "There we would be stiff and ceremonious, and here it is cosy and cheerful, and I have come to have a long talk with you." She refused Phoebe's offered chair, drew the low rocking-chair near the table, laid her head down, and altogether conducted herself with the ease of a daily visitor at the house.

"What could Madeline Depp have to say to her particularly?" Phoebe glanced at the diagram as if that would solve the riddle. She had a little secret of her own in connection with that diagram, but Madeline know nothing of that.

"I am afraid I am interrupting you," said Madeline, following the glance, and filled with wonder at the profound nature of Phoebe's studies.

"What a superior girl Phoebe is!" thought Madeline, who had been glad to close all scientific books with the close of her school life, and with no thought of ever opening them again.
"If I had her abilities I would do more good in the world than I can ever now." And she congratulated herself that she had thought of coming to Phoebe.

"What a lovely dress!" thought Phoebe, "and how beautifully her hair is arranged. What would I not give to be as easy and graceful as she is!"

Instantly closing the book, she said, "It is a very pleasant interruption, and I am glad to see you."

The visitor saw that her hostess was embarrassed, and somewhat constrained in manner, and she attributed it to resentment towards herself for not noticing Phoebe, or inviting her to her house since they had left school. Madeline had always liked Phoebe, but the liking had never been active enough to take her out of her regularly trodden paths. "She is right to resent it," thought Madeline.

"Here is another of my misused opportunities! I might have had a wise and loving friend all this time." Phoebe, she said gently, "did you never, in looking back upon your life, see some golden opportunity that you have let pass by, not deliberately, but out of mere thoughtless-ness, and did you not hate yourself for it?"

Phoebe reflected a moment. She had once fixed upon number nineteen in a lottery scheme, but finally decided upon twenty, and nineteen had drawn the great prize, and twenty only a brass locket, and she had ever since hated herself when she thought of it. But as this was a deliberate act on her part it scarcely tallied with Madeline's supposition, so she answered, "well, no, I don't think I ever did."

"I am really sorry," said Madeline,
"for now I fear you will not understand me when I tell you that I look back upon several such chances, and one of them is that I have never availed myself of the opportunity you gave me of cultivating our old school friendship. It was not I did not value your friendship. It was pure thoughtlessness, nothing more. I was not at home when you came to see me, and I kept putting off coming here, without thinking much about it. I am sorry—not on your account but for my own sake—for I need you badly now. Will you think it presumption to ask you if it is too late to number you among my friends?"

Great was Phoebe's delight at this speech. Her embarrassment did not arise from the cause to which Madeline attributed it, but sprang solely from her feeling herself to be in an inferior position to the rich girl who had come to visit her. She had counted Madeline's friendship when they were at school, fondly hoping that they were at school, and introducing her into the heaviest world, and she was disappointed, and had long since given up all thoughts of the kind. And now, here was the leader of Deppford's best society, seeking her out, and actually begging for her friendship.
She was not without her share of sentiment, and was touched by Madeline's pathetic tones. And so, with a good deal of sincerity, and a great profusion of words, she assured Madeline of her willingness to serve her in any way in her power; and, after a proper amount of girlish sentiment had been exchanged, Madeline proceeded to state her troubles.

She drew a harrowing picture of the young people who worked in the mill, her imagination supplying many details to add to Richard's account, but she took good care not to mention the source from whence this information was derived. Not that she wished the credit of having found it out herself, but she was too proud to acknowledge that a common workman had put these thoughts in her head. Phoebe, of course, supposed she had learned it all in her frequent visits to the mill, and her conscience smote her for having said on more than one occasion, that "Madeline Depp cared neither for the souls or bodies of the people who worked for her, so long as she could grind money out of them." Madeline went on to tell how the death of John Pratt had affected her, and related (under promise from Phoebe of the strictest secrecy) her own narrow escape that morning, and how she had finally resolved to try to do something for the good of her people.

A part of this discourse had bewildered Phoebe. Of the processes through which Madeline's mind had passed she had no comprehension, but once in the region of fact she felt perfectly at home, and entered into the matter with such zeal and hearty sympathy that Madeline felt she had found a treasure. True, Phoebe's schemes were mostly impracticable, and Madeline showed more common sense in her plans; but the plan once laid, Phoebe took hold of the details, and marked everything out with the most wonderful exactness. And so they got on charmingly together, and parted mutually pleased and eager to commence the great work which was to carry light and gladness to so many hearts.

When Phoebe returned to the library, after accompanying Madeline to the door, the philosophy was forgotten. She could draw a nice little diagram of her own now, and in the angles she could put persons instead of h, and c, and g. A happy smile was on her face as she leaned back in her easy chair, and gave herself up to her agreeable reflections. The whole town would soon know that she was the chosen friend of the rich Miss Depp, and associated with her in a great enterprise which would give her importance, make her widely known, and be the means, no doubt, of introducing her into that society she so coveted. All this was near to Phoebe, for, though she affected to despise Madeline, and always spoke of her in a disdainful manner, as "a very ordinary person in mind and character," yet, at the bottom of her heart she envied her more than any living mortal, and would, at any moment, have gladly exchanged her intellect, which she regarded as very superior, and her beauty, which she did not think less of than it deserved for Madeline's wealth and position.

But after all, these pleasant reflections were hard and dry compared with another which gave a delicious-ness and fragrance to all this plan, which wrapped it up as it were in such rare and sweet spices that Phoebe was fairly intoxicated. If the arrangements just made were carried out the young engineer was not the man to stand aloof. He would be sure to take part in the good work.
She would be with him frequently; and what a train of delightful possibilities this brought up in her mind!
Phoebe was quick-witted and appreciative. She saw that Richard More-ham had a great deal of ambition, and no small amount of talent. Madeline Depp would have been very much amazed if she could have known Phoebe's opinion of the engineer of her mill. The man who seemed such an insignificant speck to Madeline filled up nearly all of Phoebe's world.

Madeline's thoughts that night were by no means of so agreeable a character as those of her new friend. She felt a certain sort of satisfaction with herself, and did not waver in her purpose, for her will was strong when once aroused into action. She had the ridicule of her companions before her, yet that she did not so much mind, but there were the battles she must fight with Messrs. Gramme and Barker! She was not sure but the latter would leave her service in disgust, and she knew it would not be an easy matter to replace him. And all this she must go through with for a thing she had not very much at heart. She was going to do it because she considered that Providence had clearly shown it to be her duty; but she had no love for the duty.
Phoebe had told her the love would come after she had begun the work.
Perhaps Phoebe was right. She hoped so.

A volume might be written detailing the various schemes that Madeline and Phoebe brought to such great perfection in their councils, which schemes somehow or other worked very badly when put into practice. It was not for want of zeal and earnest effort on the part of the two girls, for they worked faithfully, and if they could only have been allowed to make over again in their own mold the people with whom they had to deal their plans were very fine indeed, but they forgot the old proverb and "taking the king's horses to water," and the beautiful structures built up with such care all fell to the ground. The older hands regarded the innovations with little favor. They could not understand why so much should be done for them, and were by no means sure that "there wasn't politics at the bottom of it all." The young folks had no objection to holidays, but they wanted to spend them in their own way. It was bad enough to tell how to work, but to be told how to play was intolerable. And both old and young looked upon the whole affair as an indirect way of "preaching" to them.

After repeated failures Phoebe asked Madeline if she might be allowed to consult her friend, Mr.
Moreham, Madeline could not refuse her consent, though she felt sure that he would boast to Phoebe of having first suggested the idea they had striven to carry out. But he gave his opinions without any reference to the memorable conversation on the log. Mr. Barker, in a surly sort of way, threw out some hints that helped along. He was quite distressed when he heard that there was to be a new order of things at the mill; then he became angry, and remonstrated, and then he threatened to leave, just as Madeline had feared.
But Mr. Gramme assured him that this general upsetting of things was nothing but a whim of Madeline's, and that it was best to humor her, if for awhile, when she would grow tired enough of it as she had of others, and then everything would fall back into the old course. So Mr. Barker remained, to wait as patiently as he might for that good time coming.
Mr. Gramme by no means approved of the reformations, but he consoled himself by balancing the accounts at the end of the month and finding that the new whims were not as costly as the old ones had been.

With a few hints from Mr. Barker, and a good many from Richard More-ham, new plans were laid, which met with more favor from the work people, and which, on the whole, did very well; but did not run with prefect smoothness, owing, Phoebe said, to the pig-headedness of the people to be benefited.

A certain number of young folks were dismissed from the mill every day at noon, thus giving each one a half holiday every week, which they were encouraged to spend in the open air, or at the gymnasiums, which were built for their benefit. Small picnic parties were organized quite often, and several times during the summer there were mammoth picnics, when all the boys and girls of the mill, and some of the older people, too, spent the whole of a long, bright day on the hills. All this was physical education.

Then there were evening schools, where there were lectures and stereoscopic views, and chemical experiments, and readings, and concerts, and charades, with a small sprinkling of study now and then.

Nor were spiritual matters neglected. On the contrary, never in the history of Deppford had they been in so flourishing a condition, for the Sunday afternoon Bible classes were filled to overflowing with old and young, especially on fine afternoons, when, true to the sanitary principle on which the whole fabric was constructed, the classes were taught in the woods, where a stated quantity of the Bible was retained, followed by a stated quantity of cakes and lemonade.

Such a variety of work called for a company of workers, and they came, trooping forth in answer until it became a serious trouble to know what to do with them. Richard suggested that some of them should take their turn in the mills while the hands were idle. But this hint found no favor. No sooner was it made clear to the Deppford mind that Madeline was in earnest in her benevolent work, and intended to persevere in it, than benevolence suddenly became fashionable, and to be a helper in the good work was regarded as a distinction. Miss Pindar, who at first frowned upon the scheme, followed in the wake of aristocracy, and undertook the post of teacher in a Sunday school. But she was so stately in her bearing and so impressive in her manner that her scholars were in mortal fear of her, and after being told by one of them that Judas Iscariot was the wisest man, and that Lasarus fell by the wayside and the thorns sprang up and choked him," she withdrew from the field.

But this is not a treatise on factory life, nor is it our intention to pass judgment on Madeline's reforms, their necessity or wisdom. She felt that those who worked in her mill did not lead the lives it was God's purpose they should. That incessant toil had much to do with this failure she fully believed. To help them to a higher life was her single purpose and earnest endeavor.

But we touch upon those reforms incidentally and only as they affect the history of the great Depp cloth mill, which history it is our purpose to tell.

LESSONS IN MECHANICS.

On the 6th of September was held the last great picnic of the season.— The patches of red and yellow that that gleamed here and there in the forest, and the streams of golden rods and purple asters that flowed up and down the hills gave token that the summer heats were passing away.
Therefore there was no pleasure on the hills except the breezy rambles on the half holidays. The schools and the gymnasiums must Elevated Railroads.

We have long contemplated bringing this subject before the people, because we believe that railroads will never be brought to a degree of perfection till they are elevated. As to the altitude, that may be a matter of choice, taste or convenience. It is true that for every foot it is raised above ground there will be some expense added at the time of its construction. Upon a level plain it will be necessary to have it high enough for all classes of vehicles to pass under it, while in a country moderately undulating or slightly mountainous, it will not be necessary to raise it quite so much, because the crossings can then be made either above or below, as they can pass either on the ridges on a higher grade, or pass in the ravines on a lower grade. So much for the crossings. To build an elevated railroad there need not be any grading of the ground ordinarily, nor cutting or digging up of stumps, but the poets can simply be long in the ravines or short on the elevations. Now it is said that there is iron enough in the State of Missouri to make the iron columns for every railroad that is now or may hereafter be built west of the Ohio, to say nothing about the vast quantities found elsewhere all over the country. Then it is certain the material can be had, and at an estimated cost of about double what it would cost to grade and level the land upon which to place the road-bed. Now it is evident that the cross-ties would be much smaller upon this road way, and as a matter of course cost much less. Now for the advantages. 1st. A higher rate of speed could be attained, because the resistance of the atmosphere would be easier overcome, and the danger of colliding with objects passing over the track entirely avoided. There would be a vast saving of machinery, on account of avoiding the dust and grit which is constantly arising from the ground on railroad beds, and which causes more than half the friction and consequent wear and tear, while the passengers would not be annoyed by the clouds of dust which are constantly blown into the cars from the road bed, but a constant supply of fresh air would supplant the clouds of dust which now renders railroad travel next to unendurable at the present day. And last, but not least, when the snow-drifts of winter piled themselves around, the elevated train would pass on its way with impunity, not caring how much it snowed. So long as people could get out to the stations the cars would always be on time.

Just hereto venture to predict that thirty years from to-day will witness more than half the railroads in the United States hereafter to be constructed built upon the elevated plan, and narrow gauge, and their average speed will be 60 miles an hour. No telegraph poles will then be needed, as the wires will be suspended by the side of the track. Let us see.

The Eastern Shoreman is out in advocacy of the re-nomination of Governor Thomas for Congress. It would seem just and proper and fully in accord with a time-honored custom to do so, especially when the member has done nothing to offend his constituents.

The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, is called the circus Court, in consequence of the lack of decorum of Justice Humphreys. Charges have been preferred against him for incompetency, and for being intoxicated on the bench.

Republican Check.

The administration organ in Washington city puts up at its leading column what it calls "The Campaign Challenge of 1876."

"Name a single reform in doctrine, law or practice that the Democratic party has inaugurated and carried out since 1840."—Senator Sherman, July, 1876.

"Name one single good act of any kind that the Democratic party has performed in twenty-five years."—Senator Morton, July, 1876.

It is not necessary to go back twenty-five years, although the Democratic party has been in a minority for sixteen. Yet it now has a majority in the popular branch of the national Legislature, and thus has the power to show its principles and policy. Let us see whether or not it has performed "one single good act of any kind."

It has exposed the corruptions of every department of the government. We can well understand that Senator Morton does not consider this "a good act," but the people do so consider it, and take it as the preliminary step to any reform that may be inaugurated. They have shown up the corruptions in the cabinet, in legislation, the army and navy, the Indian service, the customhouses. They have exposed Babcock in the White House, Delano in the Indian rig, Belknap in the War Department, Catell in the Navy, Williams in the Department of Justice. So much for the cabinet. In the House it has exposed the jobberies that centered in Blaine, Logan and others, whereby legislation was sold. In diplomacy it exposed Schenck and his swindles. By these and many other similar things the Democratic party has shown its demand for reform and pure administration. What Democracy desires it has shown by driving from power by the force of an indignant public opinion, such knaves as it has been able to detect and drag to light. The Republican party has shown its temper at the same time by acts equally characteristic. It is Republicanism that defends criminals and punishes faithful and efficient service. They have defended Schenck, Belknap, Delano, Babcock, Harrington, Haine, Robeson; it is they who have persecuted Brister, Jewell, Yarran, Pratt, Dyer and all other faithful public servants. Mr. Morton may not consider it a "good act" to unmask and punish rascality; and he may not consider it a bad act to persecute honest officers. But such as they are we offer them for his consideration, in reply to his challenge.

Here are a few additional acts which Mr. Morton may consider bad. The Democratic House has cut down the wasteful and extravagant expenses of the government and saved about forty millions of dollars in the expenses for the current year; it has framed a tariff so sound in principle and so carefully considered in details that it has revived the hopes of business in many departments.

But in all the good acts that it has done it has met with the resolute opposition of the Republicans. They have not the power to carry through any measure of reform because the republicans control the Senate. What ever they have been able to accomplish has been over the prostrate body of republican corruption. That party is desperately fighting for a continuance of all the evils that now afflict the country, and it is particularly ill when they taunt the Democracy with their inability to carry through measures of purification and reform.—Baltimore Gazette.

What Does Mr. Hayes Think of the Hayes Men in Congress?

Mr. Hayes promises reform in the civil service. Will he accomplish such a reform? Will the Republicans in Congress aid him?

Evidence of a most convincing character has been adduced against Secretary Robeson. He employs the money of the Government in bolstering up a bankrupt banking house. Does any one suppose he did it for nothing? His intimate friend and associate, Mr. Catell, has been frantically speculating out of the Government, to a large amount. Does any one doubt that Robeson furnished him the money?

If the Hayes men in Congress are really in favor of reforming the civil service, why is not Robeson impeached at once?

Mr. Hayes could hardly find a more interesting subject to write a letter about. He would do well to give his views at full length on the conduct of Robeson.

If a corrupt Secretary cannot be impeached so near the close of Grant's administration, when its sands have nearly run out, what chance would there be of accomplishing such a reform under a newly elected Republican President, in the hey-day of his power?

The Hayes men in Congress, as a more party movement, should press forward the impeachment column.—N. Y. Sun.

The Republicans of Indiana are awfully afraid the Democrats will carry the State in October. Bless their dear souls, we expect to carry Indiana both in October and November. If Blue Jeans Williams don't beat Godlove Orth, (the Venezuela swindler) for Governor, then has honesty taken its everlasting departure from the West. As pertain as the Sun sets in the West, so certain will Indiana cast her electoral vote for Tilden and Hendricks.

Four inches of snow fell Wednesday morning on Mt. Washington just after sunrise.

Secretary Robeson—Impeachment in Order.

The circumstantial evidence against Secretary Robeson is very convincing. Tested by the ordinary rules of judging of human conduct, it is irreconcilable with the theory of his innocence.

Why, then, is not Mr. Robeson impeached? Are he and his confederates employing some part of their ill-gotten gains to influence Democratic Congressmen? Democracy in the House be reminded, at the present time, by letters from their constituents, that they are closely watched, and are expected to do their whole duty in this matter of impeaching the Secretary of the Navy.

The Catells have made a great deal of money, and they are well acquainted at Washington. A sharp eye should be kept on the slow moving Democrats in the House.—N. Y. Sun.

This Cleveland Plaindealer does not seem much inclined to jump at the conclusion that Ohio will certainly go for Hayes, for it says: There are 292,000 Democrats in Ohio who will fight on, fight over. We have 44 Democratic to 44 Republican counties in the State. We now have a majority of the Congressmen in Ohio, and while it is barely possible that we may lose one or two districts that we carried two years ago we intend to elect a majority of the delegation.

The Democracy of Ohio are not the men to lay down their guns, either at the dictation of the Republicans, or because they have not always been strictly in accord with the views of the Democracy of the other States. All differences will be dropped in the presence of the common enemy, and the Democracy of Ohio will make such a fight in October as will surprise their enemies, and challenge the admiration of the Democracy of the nation. "Abandon Ohio!" Not much.

The Cynic is a man who never sees a good quality in a man, and never fails to see a bad one. There is scarcely a thing but what he can find flaws and imperfections in. The day before Jewell was removed (Sunday) General Grant, and Genl. Babcock spent the day with Boss Shepherd, at his country seat, near Washington. It was then and there, in a drunken carouse, that the political assassination of the Post Master General was determined on. The next day Grant booted Jewell out of his Cabinet, at the instigation of Shepherd and Babcock. The outrage is endorsed and approved by the supporters of Hayes and Wheeler generally, but it makes Connecticut sure for Tilden and Hendricks.

A negro named Haywood Grant, who was executed on the gallows for murder, at Rome, Georgia, last week, confessed that he was the murderer of General Thomas G. Hindman, near Helena, Arkansas, in 1865. Grant also confessed having murdered several other men in different parts of the South since the war. General Hindman was one of the most gallant men in the South, and was assassinated at his home, surrounded by his family, by the fiend Haywood Grant.

Mr. Editor:—It afforded me a great deal of satisfaction to learn through the lively columns of the Advertiser, a few days since, of the formation in Salisbury, of a Tilden and Hendricks Club, and that the steps had been taken by the lively, prudent and energetic young men of the Salisbury Democracy. This fact goes to prove conclusively, that our youths have been properly taught their duty in the old school by their aged fathers, and are now capable, willing and determined to contribute their efforts towards bringing about that political reform, which is now the great desideratum of the honest people of our land are striving for. The hope of the country is in the young, warm blood, and the strong arm of the young Democracy, which are ever ready to struggle for the maintenance of the new and correct ideas of the present, and this sentiment seems to pervade not only small communities, but the entire nation. The time has passed when the people were guided by old fogies, and in these times they are clinging to new ideas, that must very soon place many an autocratic automaton in that obscure case, from which they can look on and wonder at the rapid progress of the times under the new regime. This should be so, for it is right, and ought to be the great guide for the party during the Presidential, Congressional and every other political campaign in the future. It is especially true and important in the selection of a candidate for Congress. It is, therefore, devoutly to be hoped for, that the party in the first Congress, ional District of Maryland will select some young, active and capable worker in the solid ranks of the Democracy, who will be able to command the respect and admiration of his constituents, and reflect honor on his District and State. It is just such a man the people want and will support.

Yours Truly,

REFORM.

[Communicated.]

Mr. Editor:—I see the Eastern Shoreman has hoisted the name of Gov. Thomas for re-election to Congress. I can see no harm in this, but it seems a little hard on the President of the Senate, who went out of his way to help that journal last Spring in the way of giving it the publication of the laws. It is always best for a man to take care of his friends first, lest he may not have any to take care of. My plan is to look out for my friends and let my enemies take care of themselves. I have nothing to say against either of those gentlemen going to Congress, if the people desire one of them, but I think this fall is one of the times favorable to the party in the way of lifting the political wagon out of its old rut, and infusing some new blood into the team, and substituting some other drivers. They came near the precipice last fall, and if let alone they will tumble into ruin. Now, while Tilden, the reformer, is a candidate, we can reform the whole party. We were opposed to reforming it by turning it over to the Republicans, as the reformers desired to do last fall, and opposed their efforts to do so. But now we can accomplish everything within our own party, and it is best to begin now. Let good men be sent to the Convention, so that a good man be secured as a candidate for Congress, and good men for Electors, men who the party will vote for, in order that the whole strength of the Democracy may be brought out. Old political hack horses, lamed, gelded and spavined, can not bring out the forces, and it is useless to put them on the track. I give you these hints, Mr. Editor, in order that your numerous readers may know what one colt thinks, who is a

After a fearfully dusty ride we arrived at Seaford, glad to dust out that car and into the cool and pleasant waiting room in the basement at the Nanticoke Hotel, which the P. W. & B. R. Co. now occupy for ticket office and Ladies' and Gentlemen's waiting rooms. Speaking about the dust in the car, one perishing individual remarked that he'd inhaled several miles of that same, and considered himself a land holder of small account. A rather mild statement, say we. 'Twas so difficult for that newly married pair, to decide which was the shady side of the car, and which the most comfortable seat. Would it be in order to say that in passing, noticed that the corn crops looked quite passable, and promise a fair yield. At Seaford, perpetual quiet reigns; but they desired us to see if we could not arrange to have some other kind of rain visit the dust-begged place. We made no promises. Such masterly inactivity as is manifested by the rogues, why some of 'em wouldn't shake if they had chills about the stores at several of these small towns! Some of Seaford's oyster houses have been removed, how we did not learn, and we're not going to say that their ruins are overgrown with ivy, and flowering vines that scent the air with delicious perfumes. At the expiration of an hour's pleasant ride on the D. & D. R. R. through Dorchester's peach orchards and grain fields we were set down at this quiet hamlet, among relatives and friends. Many of the strawberry fields hereabouts are to be corn fields next year. A few shipments of early peaches passed over the D. & D. road last week. Peaches in this section, will be "few and far between."

"The Careless" B. B. Club of this place don't seem to be so very careless, after all, for during this season they have played and beaten the following clubs, on their own grounds: Seaford, Denton, Cambridge, Easton, Williamstown, Cambridge, Easton, and claim to have lost but one game during the season. We had the pleasure of calling at the "Courier Office," and a chat with Dr. Noble. Success to "the Courier!"

REHOBOTH BEACH, Del.,

July 24th, 1876.

Mr. Editor: The unspeakable pleasure of a return to this delightful place prompts a desire to communicate a few lines for the benefit of your numerous readers, in the hope that many of them may find it convenient to visit this most attractive seaside resort. I think it no exaggeration to say that there is no such place on the coast as to its natural advantages. The surrounding neighborhood is equal if not superior to any other in Sussex county, being a rich and fruitful farming section, affording a fine supply of vegetables, milk, butter, and many other articles of food to supply the Hotels and cottages. The drives in every direction for miles through the country are everything that could be desired for pleasure. The hard ground, extending as it does to the surf, avoids heavy sand at any place, and we think this is destined in the very near future to become among the most popular watering places in the country, without many of the disadvantages of other and larger places. According to the charter there can never be sold intoxicating liquors on the grounds. This is a safe guard which will attract many persons who do not wish their families to be brought in contact with such demoralizing influences as necessarily grow out of the use and traffic in rum. There is an absence of the fashionable folly of dressing, which gives an opportunity for physical relaxation, which, with the bracing ocean atmosphere, must conduce to bodily and mental health.

One of the most conclusive proofs of the increasing popularity of the place is that, with the universal financial depression there are more persons at the hotels than there has ever been at any one time before, and at this writing the season is not at its height. There are now erected some thirty cottages upon the grounds, which of course secures the regular attendance of the families of the parties building. We find some prominent capitalists here. J. J. McCullough, of the McCullough Iron Co., has erected a handsome cottage. The Hotel of Baltimore occupy a large and handsome building. J. T. Tombs has been here looking around. Such men can furnish any amount of funds, and are not slow to comprehend advantageous investments.

The "Surf House" is entertaining a large company, coming from almost every section of the country, and the well-known reputation of its proprietor, Mr. Wm. P. Rider, is extending far beyond the bounds of the Peninsula, and he makes a patronage that would follow him almost anywhere. The "Surf House" under the present management is a grand success.

The prominent towns of the Eastern Shore are represented. J. T. Tombs, Port Deposit; W. J. Jones and W. Eden of Elkton; Mrs. H. Brown and T. W. Ellison's families, Chestertown; R. J. Jump and about twenty others, Denton; Walter Thompson, R. W. Todd, Easton; Col. W. J. Leonard, J. E. Ellegood and Rev. N. M. Browne, Salisbury; Al. Townsend, Snow Hill; T. S. Hodson and Captain Merrick of Crisfield.

Wishing you could come and enjoy these delightful sea-breezes, I am yours very truly, OCEAN CITY, July 26th, 1876.

Mr. Editor:—Sometime since, I took it into my head to visit one of the seaside watering places, and by chance, I saw a copy of your excellent Journal at the house of a friend in Ocean City. The paper was interesting, and from the account you gave of the place, I was induced to pay the Eastern Shore a visit. While I expected to see a plenty of pine trees, stagnant water, chill subjects, and more mosquitoes than I had ever seen before, and a hard looking set of visitors, I assure you that I was prepared for anything. I took the cars at Wilmington, and passed over the Delaware Railroad with a fine rate of speed, arriving at Salisbury late at night, but was taken over to Ocean City the same night in time to get a good night of sleep. I was shown a good comfortable room, and slept well. The next morning I was surprised when I came to breakfast, rather late, to find such an array of beauty, intelligence and seeming representatives of wealth and refinement, and to my surprise, I found no mosquitoes, and none of those calvarious looking inhabitants which I had been induced to believe I should see, but I found Ocean City to be the resort of many of the best families in Maryland, as well as representatives of many of the other States, and the bathing is as good as can be found anywhere. The Chesapeake and the Naragansett, and if I should live, I expect in the future to make Ocean City my summer resort. It is said there will soon be another Hotel built, and I hope there will, not because the Atlantic is not all that a hotel should be, for it is a well kept and well provided house, but two or three other hotels will be required to accommodate the people, as soon as the place acquires the notoriety it so richly deserves. And you know, Mr. Editor, that it would give variety and interest to visitors to be permitted to choose between a number of houses, and to be able to call upon their friends, who were a part of another great family on the Ocean Shore.

I spent my time quite pleasantly walking, talking, bathing, sleeping, eating, fishing, sailing, &c., &c., and would write more, but I have grown so lazy since I came here, that I can hardly keep up a correspondence with my friends, much less write to the papers, but I promised to let you hear from me, and if it is worth publishing, let it go for what it is worth.

Daniel Kent, colored, was badly mangled between the bumpers of two cars of a wood train on Wednesday, at the depot. We have not learned the precise extent of his injuries.

"Have you any small vices?" inquired a countryman of one of our prominent hardware merchants. He was informed by the proprietor that the clerks had plenty of 'em.

RECOVERED.—Mr. Stevens has recovered his carriage and harness stolen by Watrous and now has strong hopes of eventually getting the horse back again.

The Tilden & Hendricks club meet in the Salisbury House Billiard room every Monday evening. All supporters of the ticket are cordially invited to attend.

Brother B. of the Chronicle, has been rusticated at Ocean City, and from his editorial correspondence, we see he does not fail to admire the sublime and beautiful.

We learn that Union Cienit M. P. Church will hold a campmeeting at Wolf Hill, near Delmar, commencing August 19th. Rev. W. G. Holmes is the pastor in charge. The public are cordially invited to attend.

This town is now "rammed, jammed and crammed" full of water melons, which are selling at reasonable prices. Many are being shipped to the cities, and have been bringing fair prices.

The recent cool weather has had the effect to thin out the people at the various watering places. Ocean City holds her own very well, yet there is plenty of room there, and the next two weeks will be the height of the season.

There will be a Sunday school celebration held at Wolf Hill, near the line of Delaware and Maryland, on Thursday, the 3rd day of August next, beginning at 2 o'clock P. M., under the auspices of the M. P. Church, Rev. Wm. G. Holmes, Past. The public are respectfully invited to attend.

Our young friend B. of the Cambridge Chronicle, in his editorial correspondence, pays to that paper from Ocean City, a glowing compliment to several of our Salisbury ladies. Among those of whom he speaks we note Miss W. Miss E. and Miss S. Bro. B. has fine descriptive powers, and when he pays a compliment he does it well.

We again remind our patrons that many of them are falling largely in arrears, and we know that it is more in consequence of inattention than from design. While it is unpleasant to keep reminding them of the fact, yet it is our duty to do so. Please take notice and call and see us and square accounts at once, and oblige, &c.

Hon. Benjamin Wilson, Representative of the First District of West Virginia in Congress, is at present sojourning at Ocean City. The Col. is an amiable gentleman, and altho' at present in bad health, is as genial and as lively as a youth. He is a gentleman of fine parts, and should his health improve, we predict he will make a fine reputation in that body.

A couple of Shad Point youths were seen in Somers & Pollitt's watermelon patch on Sunday evening. Chase was given and one of them captured. The other gave leg bail and escaped. The captured one has had to give bail for his appearance in Court. One hundred years ago it was not much of a crime to go into a neighbor's patch and get a melon, but this is the Centennial, you know.

Several evenings this week the colored population have had what they are pleased to term a festival in Toldvine's wood's just beyond California. This is all right and good and we are glad to see them thus enjoy themselves, but we are utterly opposed to the manner in which they pass through town on their way home. About 3 A. M., yesterday Main street was made hideous by their drunken yells and rowdy demeanor. Sleep was out of the question, and for a time it seemed as if pandemonium had broken loose. The bailiff expresses a determination to be on hand the next time such a disturbance is created, and we hope to see the perpetrators severely punished.
