Baga Gine

"Baga Gine" literally means "Baga woman." The Baga are an ethnic group in northwest Guinea. There is a story behind this music: A baga woman hears music. At first she didn't want to dance, but the music was so good that she couldn't stand it any longer and started to dance.

This ensemble is a "rudimental fantasy," which utilizes themes from three traditional snare drum compositions: Three Camps, The Downfall of Paris and Connecticut Halftime, a nod to Steve Gadd's performance of Fifty Ways to Leave Your Lover! Instrumentation: three snare drums, bass drum and two optional toms.

BalakulaniaSylvia Franke and Ibro Konate The song is from upper Guinea and the rhythms are played to call the farmers to work in the fields in the early morning.

SokoManady Keita The Malinke has handed down these rhythms from the people of Guinea. They are played as children arrive in each village after the announcement of a special celebration.

This list of drummers' favorites includes: Let there Be Drums by Sandy Nelson, Sing Sing Sing as played by Gene Krupa, Wipeout from the Safaris and an opening section from Queen's We Will Rock You. The performance features a drywall bucket orchestra with two trashcans.

Taiko ExcelKoki Suzuki Taiko is a drumming style of Japanese origin. While various taiko drums have been used in Japan for over 14,00 years, and possibly much longer, the style of taiko best known today has a relatively short history, beginning in the 1950s.

MozambiqueArr. Ted Nichols The Mozambique was developed by Pello El Afrokan in the 1960s. The rhythm is an Afro-Cuban fusion that Pello called a stew: Abakuá, Yoruba, Congo, Carabalí and Jiribilla. The rhythm is linked to a dance whose steps were devised by El Afrokán. "The mozambique is walking, walking in time," is how its inventor defined it.
