in words alone
let us speak these words in deed and in truth
these words are very meaningful for us but they lose their meaning when divorced from reality
from history
We can't speak of liberation

Editor's Commentary

With this issue, the SSC Informer begins its second year of publication. The lessons of the first year are firmly etched in our minds and we will make a concerted effort to correct our previous mistakes. We are often asked if we can come out more often. The problem lies in the number of staff members and funds. If we can get enough help and enough money then we would like to publish bi-monthly. We now have a staff of three ad men and would like to have many more. You can help us by joining our advertising team or by letting us know if you hear of anyone who would like to purchase an ad. Another factor that restricts us is the lack of printers in the area. Often the costs are prohibitive of what we can afford and their assets are limiting. For example, we would not be able to deal in color if we contracted with the local printers. We would not be able to have the small size nor the personal professional help that we have with Resort Publications of Ocean City.

In an effort to change the format, we will break up the block advertising and offer a variety of size ads. We have added color in an effort to make the publication more exciting. One justified complaint is that nobody knew who wrote what. From now on the initials of the author will appear in brackets before the beginning of each story. This may be checked in the list of credits. We would also like to state the policy of the SSC

INFORMER. The SSC Informer is a non-profit self supporting newspaper dedicated to the students of SSC. Informer Publications, Inc. accepts full responsibility for all articles which appear in this publication. The proper recourse for our readers is in the letter to the Editor column in which all will be published. Should any of our staff members, writers or any person connected with this Informer Publications be hassled because of what they have written, our attorneys will be notified for possible legal action.

We welcome comments from all our readers and ask for your support in making this the exciting publication we hope it will be.

(J.K. & T.M.) Saw Sally Moniot, the Academic Advisor the other day and made sure I was set for graduation. Will advise all seniors to see her or you may be in for a surprise come May. She is one of the few that tells you like it is . . .

Would like to welcome all the Freshmen that are coming in. Have had some dealings with them already this summer and they look like a dynamite class. Wish them luck as they wander through the mire . . . Speaking of mires . . . Looks like Blackwell Library is going to be something. Its about time they added another wing for the puzzle section. What with coloring books being replaced with crossword puzzle texts it should be better. One thing I hope they do is to extend the hours of the place. Nothing is more frustrating than the need to run over there and its 10:05. Would like to see it stay open until at least midnight. . .

One thing that irks me about Crawford is his placement procedure. Like kicking the best profs upstairs to paper shuffling jobs. Look at the record . . . Delaney Chairman of the Psychology Dept, Kundell to Ass't Dean, Masuchi to Department Chairman, Erskine to Dean, and with rumor, Ed Schaeffer to Chair the Chemistry Dept. Would rather have these men teaching in the fantastic way they do instead of manipulating papers . . .

Speaking of manipulating understand that Fred Kundell has that computer humming like a bird. Rumor has it that he just has to talk to it to get it to respond. But the wierd thing is when he goes down to it at night and lights candles around it . . . Keep up the good work Uncle . . .

Have a new man in the registrars office . . . a Mr.

Phipps and seems like a real concerned guy . . . Am happy to see some of the work load taken off Ms. Powell. Talk about a Womens Libber! She does the work that any three men can do. And getting at student records through her is like trying to bust into Fort Knox. Surprised she doesn't sleep next to them with a rifle at night. A real concerned person and worth a smile next time you see her . . .

One group of people that help the newspaper staff and that we have failed to recognize are the secretaries to all the important people. A great group of girls that are very understanding . . . More about them in issues to come . . .

Am really going to miss Sarge! Nothing helped the day go better than her smile at lunch and dinner . . . Her antics will be in my mind as a person who enjoys life and makes the best of each situation a lesson college fails to teach except through people like her . . . Good luck, My friend . . .

Glad to hear Miss McNamara is back and still dancing. She is really involved with the students and boy do her feet move. She has visited quite a few dance camps and is ready and willing to go. Modern Dance Club is open to anyone (male or female) that is truly interested. Her enthusiasm will keep you going!

Dr. Delaney sure has moved up in one short year as he is now head of the Psychology Department. He does have counseling services and any student with a problem will find he is very easy to talk to. Rumor has it that some even like him so much that they invent problems just for the opportunity to be near him . . .

A New Beginning

As another new school year begins, we, the students of S.S.C., should concentrate on making it better than the preceding one. We must strive for improvement, enrichment and fulfillment -- to make it the best year yet.

The number of changes undergone by S.S.C. in the past three years is stupendous: a new president; an increase in enrollment of 1800 students; an increase of faculty of 25 teachers; the addition of several new courses; a change in major requirements; a new grading system; the abolition of curfews; the initiation of a football team, a new dormitory (and co-ed at that); the start of a new library addition and renovation of Holloway Hall; a sex education course; and, of course, a new and 'exciting' kind of school newspaper.

Each year more changes occur - and at a faster rate than the one before. In adapting to these transitions, new methods must be employed - those based on uniformity, simplicity and permanence are no longer effective - we need diversity and new objectives.

Our society is extremely complex and transient, and no matter how frightening and perhaps unearthing some change, it is inevitable if we want to make the world a little better, a little closer to that ultimate goal.

S.S.C. must change too if we are to keep up with the rest of the world and not be left behind to hide in our own obsolescence. It is our responsibility to initiate those events that will make S.S.C. a great institute of learning - by discarding useless traditions and hindering rules and

Olympic Tragedy

A tragedy occurred this summer and the needless loss of lives was sad and shocking. The world was disgusted and sickened, but not only that, people all over the world sincerely mourned. Yet the reaction has not been the same to other mass murders. Mass murders invariably inspire interest and morbid curiosity but rarely mourning on such a large scale. What then, makes the deaths of the athletes from Israel so different? Very simply this - the Olympics are a symbol of peace, unity and cooperation and the contrast between the peace and cooperation for which the Olympics stand and the murders that occurred appear to be a greater loss than the death of any ordinary private citizen, even though one human life is CERTAINLY as precious as another.

It has been suggested that the Munich tragedy may inspire the initiation of peace talks between the Arabs and Israel. If this is the case, why wait for the loss of these particular lives? Far many more human beings died before these killings occurred and they are just as dead as the Olympic athletes. Until people start taking the needless loss of ANY human life just as personally as they have the loss of these lives, the killing will go on. (E.M.)

Touchback

We would like, at this time, to wish the entire SSC football team best of luck in the upcoming season. This newspaper will give unqualified support for the team and its coaches, Yobst and Minton.

This newspaper is for SSC and its improvement and we will support all sports and Physical Education activity. So best wishes team and good luck. In an effort to show our support we are sponsoring a contest for the team. We would like for our readers to come up with a slogan (eg. fighting Irish, rambling wreck, Big red, Boomer sooners) that would become a motivating cry for our great team. A prize of ten dollars will be awarded to the most original entry. All suggestions must be placed in Box 1000 by September 20, 1972. GO GULLS.

Delaney On Masters And Johnson

As long ago as 50 years, a gentleman by the name of Dickinson was well known in the United States from articles, which he wrote, on the subject of human sexuality. His articles were not based on laboratory research but were based on clinical evidence, interviews with people, and his own opinions. Fifty years ago Dickinson eloquently reminded the physicians of the United States that the gonadal impulses were here to stay, that people will continue to get married, and that they will continue to be confused about human sexuality. He argued and pleaded that the field of medicine take the lead in the area of researching human sexual responses. Almost 40 years passed without such research even though others echoed Dickinson's concern during those decades. Kinsey was really the catalyst, the great mover. He presented us with the results of his far-reaching survey of American sexual behaviors -- a survey which must have bloodshot many a puritan eye.

About this time, William Masters was a medical student who bravely told his superiors of his peculiar medical interest: the devotion of his life to the research of human sexual responses. With arched eyebrows his medical professors told him that researching sex was not without peril. Later, Masters took a position at Washington University in Missouri which enabled him to begin conducting lab experiments in human sexual response.

He took for a colleague and partner (and recently, a wife) Virginia Johnson, whose background is neither in medicine or psychology, but in sociology. He found her to be a person with whom he could communicate and he recognized that she had a wonderful ability to successfully work with people, a talent he knew he did not possess. In the last several years Masters and Johnson have published two monumental texts on human sexuality. The most well known is their first: "Human Sexual Response," and their second, published a little over a year ago is entitled, "Human Sexual Inadequacy." Their first book was a sell-out even though most people found it impossible to understand. It was so obtuse most people couldn't hack it. It was purposely written that way: almost undecipherable because they wanted the book to receive the "A" of scholarship and not the "X" of pornography.

Masters and Johnson have not gone without criticism -- rather severe in two areas: an alleged breach of ethics in their research with respect to the use of some mechanical devices and the criticism that their research was generally immoral.

This evening, ladies and gentlemen, I would like to talk about what contributions Masters and Johnson have made to our understanding of human sexual responses. Permit me to present their research in three parts. Firstly, their approach to research; secondly, what we have learned from their research; thirdly, the psychological implications of their research.

First of all, their approach to research depended on the pool of subjects. Initially, they recruited prostitutes as subjects. But when Masters and Johnson began their work they had to be pretty careful about publicity. They were afraid if their work became known to outsiders (A.M.A., D.A.R., AFL-CIO, and others who would be upset to hear about experimental subjects balling in the name of science) it would cease to be funded and come to a screaming halt. So, the researchers had to keep their work secret. Prostitutes, then, were their initial subjects and that was a pretty fair arrangement for the girls: Loads of male volunteers, (interestingly, male volunteers were easy to come-by) good pay and a very comfortable position. After a short period of time, Masters and Johnson found that prostitutes really did not fit the bill as good research subjects and discontinued their services. It wasn't because the girls were laying down on the job but because prostitutes, due to their line of work, do not have a natural vaginal orifice. Tending to develop rather large vaginal passages from their unique kind of employment, they simply were not representative of the average female, and, hence, were not proper experimental subjects.

With a risky step forward, Masters and Johnson recruited people in the academic community to engage in sexual research. Astoundingly! many were willing to volunteer. In their research, Masters and Johnson have used family units (husbands and wives) and unmarried people ranging in age from 18-80. The majority of subjects were 18-50 years of age, the oldest subject being 82 (a Fabulous Frazier of the human species). Their use of older people has resulted in truly wonderful conclusions regarding sexual adequacy in old age. (Age aside, they found that if you're hot, you're hot).

Eleven years of research! Well, just what did they do? Two of the chiefly researched techniques were those of manual and mechanical stimulation to orgasm. One of the instruments used was the plastic penis which Masters and Johnson devised. A remarkable little instrument that was driven electrically! This was used to bring various female subjects to different levels of sexual excitement while the researchers made all sorts of internal measurements and photographs. They discovered events which no one had any idea occurred during sexual excitement and orgasm. Masters and Johnson have long been convinced that sexual response is a Total human response -- and they collected the evidence to prove their hypothesis. Orgasm, sexual responsiveness is not purely genital. The total physical organism is involved. Masters and Johnson assure us that if we think that all there is to sex is what is genital -- then we are missing more than half of the joy of sexual response. In sex, there is a giving of the person -- personalities are given and received. More about this later on this evening when we look at the psychological consequences of their research.

For now, let's continue with their experimental approach: they conducted research on the various positions possible for intercourse. Writers have been telling us for centuries about the joys of the various positions. And, many people wonder if they aren't missing something by not trying sex on the porch hammock or on a tree limb or in the bath tub. We'll take a look at this later, but, for now let's get back to the total organismic response of sex. Masters and Johnson have classified the four phases of sexual response: the normal state, the excitement phase, the plateau phase and the resolution phase. What are some of the things that measurably occur? Well, for example, the female breasts in the normal state have a position that is called the base-rate. In the average woman, during the second stage (excitement phase) when the initial physiological movements occur, the nipples begin to erect and there is venous engorgement of the breasts. The breasts actually increase in size. Given further manipulation, the average woman reaches the plateau stage of high excitement. In this stage there is a marked engorgement of the areola (pigmented area at nipple base) to the point of the breast protruding over the erected nipple. Just immediately prior to orgasm the breasts of the average woman (in some women the breasts increase as much as one-fourth). As elevation in excitement is reached from the plateau phase to orgasm a pink mottling appears over the breasts of 75% of women. This mottling or rash is often referred to as the sexual flush. During the resolution phase there is a rapid disappearance of the rash and detumescence of breasts showing again the nipple erection. The sexual flush appears across the top of the breasts, on the forehead and the neck. It reaches its height during orgasm and then immediately disappears. The medical or physiological reason for the sexual flush is unknown. Sexual flush and nipple erection also occur in the male. The nipples of about 35% of men erect and sexual flush appears on the small of the back in about 50% of men.

Masters and Johnson also measured rectal movements during sexual response. The sphincter muscles of the rectum contract voluntarily in many men and women during the excitement level. This voluntary contraction aids the male in thrusting and the female in contracting. During orgasm, however, both male and female have involuntary rectal muscle control.

Masters and Johnson, then, found total bodily response -- things happen biologically, naturally!

Almost all the damn how-to-do-it sex books that people buy so readily have no scientific basis and are often actually harmful. Most marriage manuals are for the birds (actually, they'd probably break a wing following the directions).

Hyperventilation during sexual response is another measurable event worth mentioning. Though difficult (orgasm lasting only 3-5 seconds) Masters and Johnson were able to make these measurements. Hyperventilation is a deep, successive breathing, up to 40-45 breaths per minute. This is not brought on by fatigue or an excessive out-put of energy during sexual excitement. It's simply another of the organism's total responses to sex. Still another is a heart beat of 110 to 180 beats per minute recorded just prior to and during orgasm. The total organism involves itself! Another sexual response is perspiration in about 35% of women following orgasm. A filmy sheen develops on the back, upper lip, and forehead. As in the flushing response the cause is not known.

One very interesting research approach had to do with female masturbation. Masters and Johnson discovered that women quite naturally find the right way to masturbate. 95% of women never directly touch the gland clitoris. It's too sensitive!! About 85% of women stroke the anterior mons area or else either the right or left shaft of the clitoris. Some roll the hood back and use it as a manipulative device for stimulation. Only a small number of women can bear the intense excitement (over-sensitivity) of directly touching the gland clitoris. So great does the excitement become it often leads to a kind of numbness of the entire area. Often a woman will ask that manipulation be stopped because of the sensitivity and then there is a drop from the plateau to the excitement state. Often, a guy cannot hang in that long, he tires. Frequently, the male is simply manipulating in the wrong way. As a matter of fact, ladies and gentlemen, there is ample evidence to show that even in radical cases, such as the surgical removal of the clitoris, there are no problems in achieving orgasm because the sexual response nerves are buried throughout the entire mons area. So, perfect practice makes for perfect orgasm. Practice also shortens the time necessary to reach orgasm. So, practice!

Another interesting discovery: when a woman reaches the plateau level there is vasco congestion of the pelvic area. A great deal of blood flows into the area and further increases excitement. Often the male can't hang in there long enough. He ejaculates and soon detumescence sets in and he is no longer able to operate. Many men, the researchers discovered, do NOT, for one reason or another, manipulate their partners so that they can reach orgasm. Masters and Johnson claim that this is cruel in that a lot of women lay in the sack after the guy comes off and the women are really physically distressed because of the presence of vasco congestion. It takes a period of time for that congestion to pass! The woman is at the pinnacle (plateau stage) and raring to go and manipulation is needed not only for physical release but for all the other things that both of them hoped that orgasm would bring: joy, warmth and security. For some stupidly formed moral reasons some women do not feel that the men should continue and manipulate them to orgasm. (No Religion teaches that a woman should simply lay there and not be satisfied).

Masters and Johnson have also discovered a fort concerning the reproductive functions of the female. They found that the woman as she has biologically created tends to retain sperm and dam it up in a pool area at the rear of the vagina. When surgical cutting is necessary to help birth, the repairing of the opening never quite equals the vaginal floor that is there by nature. Women who have had one child often find it difficult to conceive another. Research discovered that for these women one of the reasons is that as soon as the penis is withdrawn there is no damming or trapping of the sperm and about 70% of the sperm is lost through spilling. A woman cannot become pregnant unless some of the sperm is retained at least for a short period of time.

During our presentation this evening, ladies and gentlemen, I think we are in agreement that Masters and Johnson's

"Guys & Dolls" first Show

With a production staff entirely new to the Salisbury area, the Salisbury State Theatre has announced its program for the coming year, beginning next week with auditions for its production of the long-standing favorite among American musicals, 'Guys and Dolls.' The show will be produced in collaboration with the Department of Music.

Director of the new Salisbury State Theatre is Dr. Leland Starnes, Associate Professor of Speech and Theatre, who comes to Salisbury State after almost four years as Director of University Theatre at the University of Pittsburgh. A graduate of Harvard University, Dr. Starnes completed a B.A. degree in English and an M.A.T. degree in Education, and later obtained his doctorate from the Yale School of Drama with a specialization in Directing. He taught at the Yale School of Drama and directed the Yale Dramatic Association for eight years before accepting his position as Director of Theatre at Pittsburgh.

Working with Dr. Starnes as Technical Director and Designer will be Robert Cloyd, Instructor of Speech and Theatre, who has a B.F.A. in Design from Carnegie-Mellon University. Cloyd is presently completing his M.A. from Syracuse University and came to Salisbury State after two years of teaching at Onondaga Community College and designing for the Syracuse Repertory Theatre, the Syracuse Symphony, the Famous Artist Playhouse, and the Carousel Players.

Dr. Starnes and Mr. Cloyd have announced plans for a subscription season of "significant world drama, exciting experiment, and exhilarating entertainment. We're going to begin," Dr. Starnes says, "in the enthusiastic intention to involve our students -- and thereby our audiences -- in active interpretation of the works of the important artists of the more traditional theatre forms even as we undertake experiment in the revolutionary methods and modes now being practiced by provocative, avant-garde groups all over the world. And to dispel any impression that we breathe too heavily with awareness of our own Profundity and Significance, we're going to begin our season with a production of one of America's lightest and brightest musicals. We're determined that the new Salisbury State Theatre will be for everyone a place of rich vitality and joy. Significant theatre -- if it is indeed significant -- must be an event that its audiences attend with a sense of pleasurable anticipation and excitement rather than from any heavy awareness of duty or "cultural enrichment"; truly fine theatre, we all know, arouses within its viewers of every level the excited curiosity to see even the direst truth carried out to its logical culmination because of its very theatricality. This is the wild and free kind of theatre that we're going to try like hell to bring to Salisbury State in our new season."

After the production of 'Guys and Dolls' on November 8-11, the Salisbury State Theatre will offer a student production of an original realistic play in December. Then, in February, the Theatre will stage Peter Nichols' 'Joe Egg', a play by one of England's most talented new playwrights. 'Joe Egg' is the moving story of a young couple who discover that their child is incurably retarded for life. This production will be presented on the stage of Caruthers Hall.

In April, an outrageously comic -- and tragic -- collection of short theatre pieces which, as Dr. Starnes says "were written in the present imperfect tense by several of today's most daring experimentalists" will be produced in the Experimental Theatre in Holloway Hall. 'Collision Course' was produced off-Broadway in 1968 and includes works by Jules Feiffer, Sam Shepherd, Jean-Claude van Itallie, John Rechy, and others; the production will involve dance and music.

Finally, in May, a student-directed production to be chosen from the works of Ionesco, Beckett, Sophocles, and Albee will be mounted in the Experimental Theatre.

Dr. Starnes announced that reserved seating will be the rule for all major productions of the Theatre this year and that season subscriptions will be available to members of the greater Salisbury community. Students at Salisbury State College may obtain single admissions to performances upon presentation of identification during the reservation period. "Our first obligation," says Dr. Starnes, "is naturally to our students -- but we want to involve and serve the entire Salisbury community if we can. Toward this end, we are looking forward to an exciting summer theatre and even a children's theatre which we want to take to the children in their schools and communities. And in connection with most of our performances we are going to try to arrange for stimulating conversations between our audiences and experts from other departments of the College who are qualified to expand upon the issues and methods involved in our theatre."

Dr. Starnes and Mr. Cloyd urge all members of the College who are interested in participating in any aspect of the theatre to drop in to the stage of Holloway Hall on Monday evening, September 11 at 7:30 for an informal chat and a bite to eat. Auditions for 'Guys and Dolls' will be held in Caruthers Hall, Sunday, September 17 through Wednesday, September 20. Appointments for private auditions may be made by signing up on the bulletin board in the Student Union; otherwise, anyone interested may simply appear at Caruthers Hall on any one of the evenings named between 7:30 and 9:30. Persons wishing to try for a singing role are asked to prepare a favorite song for the audition. Accompaniment will be provided.

Dr. Leland Starnes

research is very contribution to our knowledge of human sexual response. They have shed a clear light on some dark and misty places. They have told us to beware of the marriage manuals; to beware of the how-to-do-it sex books. Magazines tell us of new variations but they do not tell us about the two personalities involved. These worthless books do not tell us about the obligations and the responsibilities that two humans have to and for themselves and one another. Often, no mention of the rightful expectations of sex!

Would you believe (it's true) that as recently as 1957 a reputable medical text stated "women do not have an interest in or a capability of ever having orgasm." 1957!!! What a hell of an awful, terrible myth!!! But, what do you expect? The text was written by a man! Masters and Johnson reviewed all the literature on sexual response since 1954 and have thousands of references to femal orgasm (usually the writers say it doesn't exist) -- Not one of them written by a woman!!

Part TWO (What have we learned from and what are the psychological implications of their research) of Dr. Delaney's informal talk to the Psychology Club will be presented in the next issue of the Informer. Watch for it.

OUR JEAN-EOLOGY

In the beginning there was the Blue Jean. Now we have colors, westerners, flares and stove pipes—and even velvet jeans. The generations roll on—and multiply the jean types on our racks. Pick out yours!

From Down Over

by David May

Most people build a house. They fix the lights, arrange the furniture, have kids, plant flowers, and wipe away the dust until they so become. Then someone else builds the house again. And such is life.

Houses aren't really that bad a commodity though. They often last for a number of years (depending on the neighborhood). They are isles of security and warmth in a somewhat insecure and coolly rational world. They're a good place to watch football in December. One with a good air conditioning system can keep out most of the pollution. Anyway, there's always a shortage on them.

Our generation -- that is, the one that made its appearance at or about the middle of this century -- has vehemently opposed this trend. We have criticized people housed in Washington for bombing other people's houses; we have reacted against material progress for its own sake as conceived in the houses of industrialists and businessmen. Some of us have even come out long enough to try to get other people out of their houses, to wake them up to Truth, Humanity, and Justice. Most of us have remained inside however.

Perhaps we can now assess our efforts. Our own generation has for the most part settled down to building houses. For some, like those who infest the union here, a full house is one of life's chief delights. But those vermin aside, despite rhetoric to the contrary, bombs still fall in Ireland, Vietnam, Bangladesh, and Silver Spring. Profit still yokes people caught in endless cycles of misery disguised as prosperity. Most folks don't appear to be too interested in our versions of Truth, Justice, and Humanity. Too busy building houses, I guess.

Therefore, many of us have degenerated into apathy or cynicism. We turn our backs to the world and drown it in drugs, erections, and orgasms. We pout like children.

What we have failed to realize is that housebuilding is an eminently rational activity. Throughout history most people have been given a bum rap. What our own time has gained in affluence it has lost in existential peace. Frankly, the world outdoors is still as scary as it was when wolves still roamed next door. The problem is the most of them come in human form nowadays. That is partly why people do not necessarily want their consciousness of the world heightened. They know it too well already; and they have no guarantee that the world we vaguely envision will be any better. So they build houses (and thereby make certain that it won't be).

People will still be people no matter the social structure of their relationships. Admittedly, one social structure may be more conducive to compassionate behavior than another. But human beings are passionate beings; love, hatred, anger, jealousy, fear, pride, mercy and the desire for peace, justice, revenge, or order are the real forces that breathe life into the intellectual constructions of man. One can thus see why humanism is both a Truth Faith and incredibly naive. Man does indeed create his own world; but our century above all others should realize that even the issue of survival itself cannot prevent people from becoming victim of the passions that drive them so.

Therefore, to change the world we must love it, love it passionately. But beyond this, we must seek something more than plain humanism to give us the conviction, to give others that conviction, that what we are attempting to do has at least the promise of beginning to build a better world. Passion of any timbre is eventually destructive unless combined with the conviction that the suffering involved will somehow fulfill the longings of man.

Yobst on Football

Editors Note: The following is a brief description from an interview with the coach. My apologies to the team if there is a mistake as football is not my bag and I know very little about it. Please submit your name to box 1000 if you know something about the game and would like to write. We need writers for all sports.

Head Coach Richard Yobst, Coach of SSC's football team announced that he will use the wing T Formation offensive in an interview on September 1. Citing that the wing T gives good passing flexibility as well as good formation for a running game, the coach denied rumors that he will use the "three yards cloud of dust" offense play. However the coach stated that he will use the split 5 and the 46 which gives flexibility in defense.

The coach continued that his biggest problem as well as an asset was the inexperience of the team. The art of developing a good foundation and building a strong program were his reasons in describing the good points of the team. The coach also stated that Courtland Lilly will be making the extra points. Describing the blitz as a good play to use at the right time, the coach stated that he will use stunt from both defenses.

Jeff Polk, a 96 sprinter, was described by the coach as the fastest man on the team and will play split end.

HAITIAN DIVORCE: A MATTER OF SPEEDY DECREE

NEW YORK, NEW YORK—Though married Americans may never quite achieve the authority of a Moslem man who merely informs a wife that "I divorce thee," there is now a new way to obtain a divorce that involves a mere 24 hours. And, as many American divorcees who travelled to Haiti for their decrees will testify, what a difference a day makes.

Haiti has no residency requirements for a divorce. All it takes is the presence of one spouse and the written permission of the other. Incompatibility is sufficient grounds in every case.

One organization, Haitian Agency, Inc., assisted more than 200 lawyers across the United States in arranging Haitian divorces for their clients during the past year. The leader in this specialized field, Haitian Agency, of Hartford, Conn., can handle all support services through the mails. Personal contact with prospective divorcees or their lawyers is not necessary.

Explaining the procedure, William K. Halligan, Director of Haitian Agency, says the necessary forms are submitted by his firm to a couples' attorneys after his office is contacted. When both parties, after legal consultation, decide upon a Haitian divorce, Haitian Agency provides a package service for $780 that includes round trip air fare from New York (guaranteed reservations), overnight hotel accommodations (two meals), all legal and court costs in Haiti, document registration, translation and fees, and personal attention in the Caribbean nation.

"Either spouse can go to Haiti," Mr. Halligan explains. "Our experience shows that about half the time the husband goes, and half the time the wife goes. The party not present in these 'mutual consent' divorces is represented in Haiti by a power of attorney granted a Haitian lawyer."

The Americans fly to Haiti's modern Francois Duvalier International Airport in 3½ hours. There they are met by the Haitian Agency's representative and by a band playing folk music.

Shortly after arrival, they are briefed by an attorney who instructs them as to the time they must be in court and the proper clothes to wear—coat and tie for the men, skirts for the women.

The visitor is shown discreetly into a side office of the court house. Nobody is in the judicial presence for more than five minutes. After court, there are friendly exchanges with the attorney and, many times, the divorcees stay in Haiti for a sight-seeing fling. Normally, the divorce papers are processed and forwarded within three weeks.

"Frequently," Mr. Halligan relates, "an individual requires the decree right away, usually because remarriage is planned. In these cases, the divorcee stays in Haiti an extra day or two and returns with a copy of the decree."

What sort of people use the Haitian Agency's services?

"Our clients represent a cross-section of society," Mr.

Halligan claims. "We have served lawyers, doctors, secretaries, businessmen, working men, school teachers and diplomats from this country and abroad."

Why did more than 5,000 Americans utilize Haiti's speedy divorce services during the past year?

"Speed and simplicity," Mr. Halligan believes. "Months of anguish and legal procedures can be avoided by going to Haiti," he says.

WHEN ONLY THE VERY BEST IS GOOD ENOUGH!

BIG DEAL you bet it is

No matter how you feel about the war in Vietnam, the fate of this prisoner of war is a big deal. To his wife and children. To his parents. To the signatories of the Geneva Conventions. To all rational people in the world.

The Red Cross is asking you to consider the matter of prisoners of war and those who are missing in action in Asia.

It is not asking you to take a stand on the war itself. It is asking you to ask Hanoi to observe the humanitarian provisions of the Geneva Conventions.

Ask Hanoi to release the names of men it holds prisoner. Ask them to allow prisoners to communicate regularly with their families. Ask them to repatriate seriously ill and wounded prisoners. Ask them to allow a neutral intermediary to inspect places of detention.

Ask them this in a letter mailed to:

Hey Jude

The end and the beginning! The end of the Summer of '72 and the beginning of a year that offers a lot of potential here at SSC. The resources are here now and the task now is to develop them -- to develop them fully.

The summer was certainly a memorable one. The Democratic and Republican conventions offered us George McGovern and Richard Nixon as the candidates for President. This is the first time that the AFL-CIO has never endorsed a Presidential candidate. More and more soldiers were pulled out of Vietnam and now the number is approximately 39,000 -- a fairly low number in comparison to the past. The death of the first leader of the F.B.I. - J. Edgar Hoover and the attempted assassination of George Wallace will merit a write-up in the history books of the future. Martha Mitchell became very influential, so outspoken was she that her husband was forced to resign from politics. The Women's lib movement became bigger than ever with such leaders as Gloria Steinem, Jane Fonda and Bella ABzug paving the way. President Nixon even gave the movement some support as he honored August 26 as the Anniversary of Women's suffrage.

On the state level - Maryland offered two vice Presidential candidates - Shriver and Agnew. And who can forget the "Flood of 72" - A flood so devastating that homes, trailers, businesses and even people were washed away. It was labeled one of the worst of the nation and the damage covered an extensive area in Maryland and Pennsylvania. Hopefully the new bay bridge is to be completed by July 4, 1973 and by that time Ocean City will have grown to be a little Miami. On the note of local interest it appears that Ceasar Chavez's farm workers union is planning to move in on the shore.

The Summer of '72 - a short period of marked accomplishments and phenomenal events. Now what's ahead. The country will definitely undergo some changes depending upon the results of the election. The eighteen year old is now a prospective voter and hopefully they will take advantage of this opportunity. The draft laws have recently been changed for '73 and who knows what's in store for the nation. However at least each individual determines his own fate. What will happen to you in the year to come? No matter what your goal or dream only you can control your destiny. Set that goal and fight for it. "STAND!" Good luck in the coming school year.

Life & Such

by barney & joann honeychuck

Hello! Allow us to introduce ourselves. We are Joann and Barney. The improbable last name you see behind our conglomerate first names on the byline is really ours and can be verified with the proper authorities. We will be occupying this space in each issue of this paper and we hope that you will gain something from us, be it insight, pleasure, love, or whatever. The column title is purposely broad, designed to leave any topic open to us which we might want to share with you. This first issue's treatise has been written primarily by Jo. We hope you enjoy us.

We can all love even more. Call it what you will -- being altruistic, philanthropic, Christian, or whatever. I call it being just plain human. We can all scream a louder YES to life. We can be more loving.

We all have inborn needs to love and be loved. Why not fulfill your needs -- spend your time loving?

When was the last time you went out of your way to do something nice for somebody else? When did you last give something up so that you could give something to someone else? Has someone recently been able to believe a little more in mankind because you showed him/her your goodness? Think about our lonely, alienated students, teachers, yes even administrators. You can help bridge the isolatedness with some of your love.

The Little Prince tells us "It is only with the heart that one can see rightly; what is essential is invisible to the eye." A sincere interest in the person, a friendly smile, a kind word, a helping hand, a little time, (a little love); these acts give quality to our humanness. Each one of us is capable of doing these small, simple things which are the greatest of life's treasures. And in the process thereof, we will also be fulfilling our inborn need to feel worthwhile. Self-respect will be yours by knowing that you are properly esteeming your fellow man. You will gain more happiness for yourself, more confidence in yourself in knowing that you are doing something good. You, too, form the multitude. Truly, it is in giving that you receive!

Share your humanness, the hope, fear and love born in you. Share open minds, new ideas, sunshine and rain!

And our world will be a better world.

Take care and pass it on,

barneyandjo

P.S. We want to share your comments, thoughts, and ideas. Write to us care of the "Informer," Box 1000

wine n' cheese

Wine and Cheese is a column devoted to the thoughts you may have while passing a sunrise, sipping a nice wine, or sharing your bed with someone you care for. No names please. Box 1000.

Television sure has done damage to our society. Like teaching people to kill, showing the indians as bunch of heathens, but worst of all, showing us our inadequacies. Like bombarding us with those insipid commercials. Who the hell ever noticed a ring around the collar before the ad came out? Who really gives a damn about which wash is whiter as long as it is clean? You know, now we look at people for the whiteness of their teeth, the smell of their body, the wax in their ears, and the clearness of their eyes. Such plasticness.

Sat down and talked to a lady who was in her mid fifties and had her husband with her. She babbled on and on about him and how he was a big corporation executive and how rich they were. Then she told me about the stroke he had about six months ago and about how he could not comprehend or understand things. She finally left for a moment and I started to smile at her husband. He pointed to the sky just as a cloud was about to hide the sun, showed me a sea gull hovering in the wind, and the sea grass bending in a field. And each time he looked at these sights he smiled and seemed satisfied. It was then that I realized that he had a hell of a lot more than I did.

Bought the family a Golden Retriever but it was really for me. It was kind of nice to take that momstosity of a puppy up on the beach and sit back and relax. He certainly was a nice companion to sit and talk to. I used to enjoy his complete love of life and his efforts to please me. Those of you that have a dog know what I mean. This is my first one. What a friend.....

Visited the country this past summer and learned what a city slicker I had become. Cows have utters not gutters, locust trees do not give maple syrup and hay rides do exist. All humor aside, an old fashion hay ride will do wonders for your head. A ride through the fresh country air cleans your soul and you become carefree once again. Be a child. Walk through the country.

Had my favorite bar thru this summer. It was the Wine Cellar in the Castle Motel on 37th street. John and Dave sure did a nice job on helping me keep my sanity. Met some great people like Tom Brown, Gwen, Paul, Lynne, and many others. My thanks good people for the great times and the help you gave me

Students To Seek Trustee Spots At U. Of M., Md. State Colleges

Reprint From Balti. Sun
By Sue May

The new president of the United Colleges of Maryland said today the group, which speaks for students at 10 colleges, will seek student representation "with equal voting rights" on the University of Maryland's board of trustees and the Maryland State Colleges board of trustees.

"These groups really govern the colleges and it is important that we get in the mainstream and try to have more influence," said Charles C. Mullings.

The 25-year-old chemistry major at Coppin State College said the executive council of the student organization would ask for three seats on the regents board and two on the trustees board when the proposal goes before the two bodies in September.

West Indies Native

Mr. Mullings, a native of Jamaica, West Indies, is the first black to head the organization now in its fourth year. He also heads the Coppin Student Government Association.

The United Colleges of Maryland represents approximately 100,000 students at the University of Maryland, College Park; University of Maryland, Baltimore county; Towson, Coppin, Frostburg, Bowie, Hagerstown Junior College, Allegheny Junior College, Community College of Baltimore and Essex Community College.

The council feels, Mr. Mullings said, that black colleges are not being given "an equal share" of educational resources by the state and "we want to have that corrected."

Inferior Facilities

For instance, he explains, the physical amenities at Coppin, which has approximately 3,000 students, "are much inferior in quality and quantity" to those at Salisbury State College, a white school with a smaller student body of some 1,599. "If you would just take a look at the cubby-holes that are used by men with doctorates at Coppin," he said, adding, "I would be terrified by claustrophobia."

The group he went on, has looked at the 1971-1972 budgets of the state colleges and found inequality in the distribution of funds. State colleges are given funds according to the number of students on campus.

"Thorough Study"

Mr. Mullings would not say which schools are getting lesser amounts at this time because "we are making a thorough study of the situation."

The council would like free medical services, including those of a gynecologist, psychiatrist and general practitioner, at every state college campus.

"Most of them don't have much of this," he said, "and at Coppin it is nothing more than a nurse.

"Some of the student on campuses today are really troubled and frustrated. A psychiatrist, particularly, would be of real value."

Student Legal Problems

Mr. Mullings said student government associations should be able to hire their own lawyers to handle student legal problems. At the University of Maryland, College Park, this is not allowed and the council wants to know why.

A special committee, he said, will be named to coordinate political activity on all the campuses.

Dr. Ed Delaney

Delaney Takes Chair As May Steps Down

(T.M.) Dr. Edmund Delaney was elevated as Chairman of the Psychology Department effective September 1, 1972 it was announced by Dr. Norman C. Crawford, President of Salisbury State College. Dr. Delaney stated that he was pleased with his appointment and that he was greatly interested in moving the Psychology Department forward in a positive manner. Dr. Delaney also announced the addition of three new members to the Psychology staff that were hired after a nation wide search. The results of his efforts include Jeff Flatt who is especially qualified in the area of the preschool child, and aging; George Whitehead whose background is Social Psychology, and who is experimentally oriented, and Steve Levine who is a clinical school Psychologist. Dr. Delaney feels that the addition of these members will help broaden the base of education for Psychology Majors.

Dr. Delaney stated that after teaching at the University of Illinois for four years, the pressures for publication, the fierce competition in large departments and the total lack of personal relationships with students were his Chief reasons for choosing SSC. Dr. Delaney stated that he was impressed with Dr. Crawford and his efforts to lead the college toward progressive education.

Dr. Delaney also confirmed rumors in that he hopes there will be cooperation between the new mental facility and the psychology students of SSC.

Dr. Delaney earned his Doctorate from the University of Illinois and did his undergraduate work at St. John's Seminary in Boston.

Crawford Outlines Future

(J.K.) President Norman C. Crawford stated in an informal news conference that he is excited about the upcoming school year due to the tremendous growth that SSC has experienced. The conference held in the President's office on September 1, centered around the new building plans for the campus.

According to Dr. Crawford, the new gym will house a swimming pool, a large gym, wrestling, weightlifting and sun bathing facilities as well as classroom space. The status of the new gym remains before architects pending approval by the State.

Commenting on the new student union, Dr. Crawford stated that it is now in the planning stages. The facility is being designed by a group of students who are sensitive to student needs. The old student union will be converted to a dining hall he related.

The new dormitories are also being considered with a "build as you need them attitude." The plans now

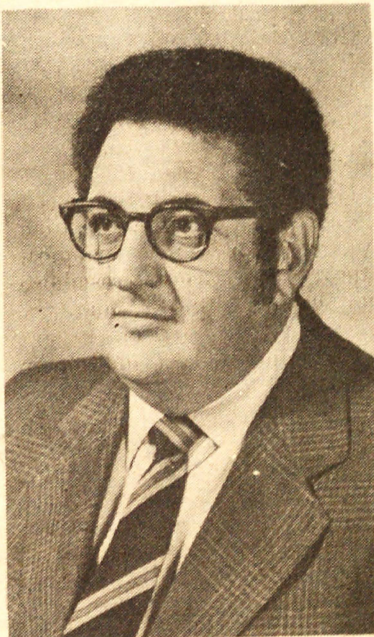

Masucci To Head Education Dept.

(T.M.) Dr. Norman C. Crawford, President of Salisbury State College, has announced the appointment of Dr. Michael Masucci to the position of Chairman of the Education Department. Dr. Masucci was the chairman of the Department of Personnel Services, College of Education at the University of Illinois. Dr. Masucci earned his doctorate at Syracuse University with his undergraduate work completed at LeMoyne College. The new chairman stated that he was dedicated to excellence in education and one of his many goals is to provide personal attention to in service teachers in an effort to better the educational process.

Dr. Masucci also stated that he was pleased with the new members that were added to his staff. The educator is published in several journals including the Journal of Personnel and Guidance and the Journal of Counselor Education and Supervision. Dr. Masucci stated that he was turned on to Salisbury due to the accessibility of student exchange and the easy communication between faculty and students. He further stated that his office door will always be open to students and that he hopes to also to do job counseling.

Dr. Masucci describes himself as a man of many moods and enjoys different types of music, books and poetry. He is married and has four children.
